1753. Married—John Headington and Eliz. Cummings: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 49.

London, 1; MDB. (co. Berks), 3.

Headland, Hadland.—Local, 'of the headland,' from residence thereon.

John del Havedland, co. Suffolk, 1273.

A. London, 6, 5; MDB. (co. Dorset), 1, 0.

Headley, Hedley, Headly.—Local, 'of Headley' or 'Hedley,' parishes in the dioc. of Winchester. The entries below seem to relate to another spot:

Alan de Hedleg', co. Salop, 1273. A. Nicholas de Heddeleg', co. Salop, ibid. Cecilia de Hedleggh, co. Staff., 20 Edw.

I. R. Willelmus de Hedlay, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 147.

1690. Bapt.—Caleb, son of Philip Headman: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 155. London, 1.

Headdon.—Local; v. Heading.

Heafeld; v. Heathfield, of which, no doubt, it is an abbreviation; cf. Heacock for Heathcock.

London, 1.

Heal, Heale, Heales.—Local, 'at the hele,' from residence thereby. Hele seems to be a variant of Hill.

John in the Hele, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 109.

Edith atte Hele, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid. p. 110.

William in the Hele, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid. p. 121.

Edith in le Hele, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid.

I could give many more instances from the same record. One thing is certain, the West country is the chief habitat of the surname. The MDB., co. Soms., proves that Mr. Lower mentions a Sir Roger de la Heale, co. Devon, temp.

Hen. III (Patr. Brit. p. 153); v. Heald for a North-English variant.

London, 4, 1, 6; MDB. (co. Soms.), 11, 2, 0; New York, 6, 0, 0.

Heald.—(1) Local, 'at the hele' (q.v.). Here d is an ex-crescence; cf. Neild for Neil. Both Heald and Neild are familiar to South Lanc.

1582. Married—Hughe Grene and Anne Heylde: Reg. Prestbury, co. Ches., p. 75.

1586. Buried—Rychard Heale, or Hull: ibid. p. 92.

1585. Bapt.—Frances, d. John Heath: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 17.

London, 82; New York, 42.

Heathcoat, Heathcote, Heathcock.—Local, 'at the heath-cote,' the exact locality unknown. As usual (v. Glascock) the suffixes -cote or -cot and -cock are inextricably confused, -cock being as often used for -cote as not, even in 13th century records. Wilcock (q.v.) is found as Wilcot in the same roll that contains the first instance below; v. Coate and Cocks for the difference in meaning. It is just possible however that Heathcock was a nickname, as the black-cock sometimes goes by that name. In that case there is no connexion between Heathcote and Heathcock.

Walter Hathcock, co. Essex, 1273. A. 1600. Bapt.—Margeret, d. George Heathcock: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 90.

1609. George Simon and Alice Heathcott: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 133.

Hellersden; v. Hillersdon.

Helliar, Hellier, Hellyar, Hellyer, Helyear; v. Hillier.

Hellis.—Bapt. 'the son of Ellis'; v. Heelis. Aspirates are of no account in early nomenclature. Ellison is found as Hellsion in 1379.

Johannes Helysson, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 277.

1789. Married—John Mason and Frances Hellis: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 28.

London, 3.

Helm, Helme.—(1) Local, 'at the elm'; cf. Ash, Oak, Birch, &c. The aspirate is no obstacle to this view; v. Hellis, &c., and cf. Empsall and Hemsall, or Elmsley and Helmsley. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Helm.' Although Miss Yonge has Helmar in her Glossary, and Helmsley would seem to be 'the meadow of Helm,' still I have not found a single trace of a personal name Helm in old records. I consider (1) to be the solution.

London, 2.

Hemans, Hemmens.—Bapt. 'the son of Emeny.' This forgotten font-name found as Emayn and Imania, like all other names beginning with a vowel, early took an h to it. It was very popular along the East coast (v. Emeny), and existed as a Christian name till the close of the 17th century in Norfolk. The s in Hemans is, of course, the patronymic, as in Jones. Emeny was a favourite in Yorkshire, where the nick. Nemeny existed, so we cannot be surprised to find Hemmens as a surname in the same county.

Heman Grelin, co. Suff., 1273. A.

Hemin'-uxor B'car, co. Camb., 1273. A. 1646. Married — John Heamans and Mary Peyhen: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 25.

Henderson; v. Hendry.

Hendrick, Hendricks.—Bapt. 'the son of Henry'; Dutch Hendrik. Modern immigration has added Hendriks and Henriques to the London Dir., but Hendrick and Hendricks represent a much earlier importation from the Low Countries. The d is intrusive, as in our own Hendry for Henry.

London, 2, 0; Philadelphia, 7, 62.

Hendry, Hendrie, Henderson.—Bapt. 'the son of Henry.'

The d is intrusive. Hendry is still a common provincialism for Henry. In Wales this was the ordinary form, as is proved by the surnames Appendrick and Pendry, q.v.; cf. ribbon and riband, Simmons and Simmonds. The border clan of Henderson are found as Hendirsonne, Henresoun, Henryesson, and Hendersonne in documents of the 16th and 17th centuries (v. The Debateable Land, by R. Bruce Armstrong, p. 182).

Herberer.—?

Edmund Heyberer, C. R., 12 Ric. II.

Herbert, Herbertson, Herbison.—Bapt. 'the son of Herbert.' 'St. Haribert was archbishop of Cologne about the year 1000, and at that time the name became extremely common among the French nobility. A Norman settler had brought it to England even in the time of Edward the Confessor' (Yonge's Christian Names, ii. 407). It was a popular and fashionable personal name throughout England in the 12th and 13th centuries. Hence it obtained surnominal honours. Herbison is a corrupted form of Herbertson.

1764. Married—Thomas Heriot and Mary Moody: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 134. London, 1, 1.

Heritage.—Local, 'of the heritage,' from residence on a spot or property so called. A local surname of this character would easily arise. I know a spot near Oldham, co. Lanc., which from time immemorial has gone by the name of 'Dowry,' taking its title no doubt under similar circumstances. The first instance below should have been entered John de la Heritage.

Hern, Herne; v. Hearn and Heron.

Hernshaw, Earnshaw, Hearnshaw, Ernshaw.—(1) Nick, 'the hernshaw,' a young heron. Heronshaw is still used in co. Cumberland in the same sense. (2) Local, 'at the heronshaw,' a heronry, from residence beside the same. Cotgrave has O.F. haironniere, 'a heron's nest, or ayrie; a hermeslaw, or shaw of wood wherein herons breed' (v. heronshaw, Skeat). Probably Henshaw (q.v.) is a variant of Hernshaw.

Herring, Hering, Herrin.—Bapt. 'the son of Haring' (Yonge, ii. 406). There can be no doubt about the parentage of our Herrings. It will be observed that the prefix le is never found in these early records, suggesting that the surname is not (at least in the majority of cases) a nickname taken from the fish. They are generally found inland also. It is quite certain, too, from such local names as Harrington, Herrington, Herringham, Herringshaw, Herringswell, and Herringsstone, that the personal title was of very early use. It may be regarded that most of our Herrings are of fontal origin.

Herringbreeder.—Occur. 'the herring-breeder.' Oysters we know may run short. A similar fear seems to have originated this name. It is a curious sobriquet.

Symon Haryngbreder, London, 1273. A.

Herringham.—Local, 'of Herringham.' I cannot find the spot. It means the ham or homestead of Herring, the possessor; v. Herring, Herringshaw, &c.

MDB. (Notts), 1.

Herringshaw.—Local, 'of Herringshaw,' some spot in co. Lincoln. The derivation is obvious, the shaw or wood that belonged to Haring or Herring, the tenant; v. Herring.

MDB. (co. Lincoln), 5.

Herrington.—Local, 'of Herrington,' literally 'the town of Haring,' the first settler; v. Herring and Harrington. Herrington is a double township in the parish of Houghton-le-Spring, co. Durham. London, 1; Philadelphia, 3.

Hersee, Hersey, Hearsey.—Local, 'de Herci.' I cannot find the place; probably in Normandy. Mr. Lower says, 'Malveysin de Hercy was Constable of the honour of Tykhill, co. York, temp. Hen. III.' Patr. Brit. p. 155.

Heseltine.—Local, 'at the hazel-dean'; v. Hasleden. London, 4.

Hesket, Heskett.—(1) Local, 'of Hesketh.' The surname is frequently spelt Heskett; v. Hesketh.

'He and his wife gave their inheritance to Sir William Heskayte'; Baines' Lanc. ii. 115.

In the Preston Guild Rolls the name is spelt variously Hesketh and Heskett (v. Index, p. 225). (2) Local, 'of Heskett,' a parish in co. Cumberland. This, of course, is the parent of the Cumberland Heskets and Heskettus.

MDB. (co. Cumberland), 2, 4.

"So long he lived in that estre,
 That for hys name he hight Tuncestre."

Estres, the inward parts of a building, chambers, walks, passages in a garden (A.N.); v. Will. and Werw. p. 64 ('Halliwell').

Hexter.—? Local, 'of Exeter' (?). I cannot suggest any other origin, and Mr. Lower has preceded me in the suggestion. There would be nothing extraordinary in this derivation, as the aspirate comes and goes at pleasure in English surnames, as this dictionary fully proves. It would be strange if Exeter was not represented in our directories. It can only be represented by Hexter, as Exeter does not exist as a surname.

John de Excestre, co. Wilts, 1273. A. 1797. Married — James Hexter and Martha Boyden : St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 171.

The strongest proof of the above derivation is that Hexter is a familiar Devonshire surname.

Heyen.—Local, 'at the heyen,' i.e. hedges, from residence thereby. This term is evidently the plural of hey, a hedge, an enclosure; cf. alren for elders (v. Alder). Possibly some of our Hayns and Haynes are so derived.

William atte Heyene, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 140.

Heyer.—Nick, 'the heir'; v. Eyre and Ayre. The American directory instances, by the Christian names prefixed, seem in most cases to be of German parentage.

Heylin, Heylyn, Hayling, Haylings.—Bapt. 'the son of Heilin.' Possibly a variant of Aylwin, q.v. The aspirate need give no trouble, as this dictionary fully demonstrates. Of course the g in Hayling and Haylings is excrement; cf. Jennings.

Heyman; v. Hayman.

Heysham, Haysom.—Local, 'of Heysham,' a parish on the coast of Morecambe Bay, co. Lanc. (Hessam in Domesday).

'A branch of the Hessams, or Heyshams, retained the local appellation long after the family had ceased to have any connexion with the parish (Heysham). William and Robert Heysham were born in Lancaster, and, going to London, became eminent merchants there, and both served in several parliaments in the reigns of Queen Anne and George I': Baines' Lanc. ii. 503.

Hiatt; v. Hyett.

Hibbard, Hibbart, Hibberd, Hibbert, Hibbit, Hibbitt, Hibbett, Hibbits, Hibbitts, Highberson.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Herbert' or 'Hubert'; cf. Hobart, Hubert, Hebard. Doubtless in some cases all the forms in Hibbard are thus described, although the change from e and u to i is abrupt. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Isabella,' from nick. Ibb, and dim. Ibbet; v. Ibbett and Ibbetson. The enormous popularity of Isabella in Yorkshire gave us a ring of changes upon it in the North of England, and amongst others (with an aspirate) Hibbot and Hebot. These gradually assimilated themselves to the surnominal forms rung upon Herbert; cf. Highberson with Ibberson, Hibbitt with Ibbitt, Hibbit with Ibbit, Hibbett with Ibbett, q.v.; also cf. Ibberson and Hibbard. I think the comparison is conclusive. At the same period aspirates were indifferently used; cf. Hoddy for Oddy, Hemmens for Emmens (v. Hemans), &c. That the aspirate was used for nicks, of Isabella is proved by such entries as:

Johannes abbe Baris, et Hebot uxor ejus, 1379: ibid.

The usual form in this roll is Ibbot. The same person is probably alluded to in the following first two entries:

1580. Thomas Hibbott, co. Worc., Bras. Coll.: Reg. Univ. Oxfr. ii. 94.

1584. Thomas Hibbotts, Bras. Coll.: ibid. iii. 120.

1591. James Hibbert, barbitonser, and Mary Heydon: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 193.

1786. —Thomas Hibbard and Mary Parker: ibid. p. 391.

1794. —John Scott and Mary Hibbarts: ibid. ii. 163.

This, as in Hibbotts supra, is the patronymic s, as in Jones, Williams, Watkins, &c. Hence the American Hibbits or Hibbitts.

1808. Married—Richard Darwin and Diana Hibbart: ibid. p. 385.

It is quite clear that the two derivatives (1) and (2) are correct. It is equally clear that the representatives of both have become inextricably mixed in our modern directories.

Hichens, Hichisson.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick. Hitch; v. Hitchen.

London, 3, 2.

Hick, Hicks, Hickes, Hickey, Hickie, Hickson.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick. Hick or Higg, whence Higgs, and the dims. Higgin, Higgins, and Higginsons; v. Higin. The pet form of Hick was Hickey. That Hick was popular is clear.

'Hikke the hackney-man
And Hugh the nedlere,'

Piers Plowman.

'Bat-que Gibbe simul, Hykke venire subent.' Gower.

That Hick was the nick. of Richard, for a time rivalling Dick, is clearly manifest. Roger, Robert, and Richard, the then three popular boys' names in R, produced three nicks. in D, viz. Dodge, Dob, and Dick. They also produced three nicks. in H, viz. Hodge, Hob, and Hick; cf.

'Humpty-Dumpty sat on a wall,
Humpty-Dumpty had a great fall.'

Or, again:

'Hickery-Dickery-Dock,
The mouse ran up the clock':

where are clear reminiscences of Humphrey and Richard. Thus useful are these old nursery rimes for etymological purposes. If it be objected that Hick is hard and Richard soft, the same objection applies to Dick, the fact being that Rickard is not an uncommon entry. Besides, Hick had a softened variant in Hitch, whence our Hichins, Hichinsons, Hitches, Hichinsons, Hitchmoughs, Hichins, and Hitchings; v. Hitchen. In the after-race for popularity Dick won at a canter, and while Hick is forgotten, Dick holds his own.

Hickford.—Local, 'of Hickford,' some spot in co. Salop. Sir Robert Atkins, in his Ancient and Present State of Gloucestershire, says (p. 109) that 'The Higfords were of an ancient family in co. Salop, originally styled Hugford.' About the reign of James I the surname was turned into Higford: this, of course, has now become Hickford; cf. Higg and Hick, Slagg and Slack, &c.

Edith de Hicford, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

This entry seems to prove that Hickford was a known form of the name six centuries ago.

Hickin, Hickins.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick. Hick, and dim. Hickin, exactly corresponding to Dick and Dickinson. For full history, v. Hick. Hickin is very rare, the popular variant being Higin, q.v. Hickin, however, is more correct.

1806. Married—William Hickling and Mary Vause: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 345. London, 2, 3; Barnsley, 0, 1; Philadelphia, 0, 6.

Hickman, Higman.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Hickman'; cf. Bate-man or Tiddeman. Lower says, 'The pedigree of the extinct baronet family Hickman, of Gainsborough, is traced to Robert Fitz-Hickman, lord of the manors of Bloxham and Wickham, co. Oxford, 56 Hen. III. Hence the name must have been originally a baptismal appellation.' Higman is the result of laziness in pronunciation.

Walter Hikeman, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

(2) Occup. 'the servant of Hick,' q.v.; cf. Addyman, Matthewman, Jackman, Bartleman, and Hitchman, which is but a weakened variation. For a good illustration of this, v. Hitchman.

1691. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Edward Hickman: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 342.

1697. Married—Daniell Hickman and Ann Pope: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 49. London, 21, 1; Philadelphia, 61, 5.

Hickmott.—? Nick. A variant of Hitchmough (?), q.v.

1585. Bapt.—Fraunces, s. Edward Hickmot, saddler: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 28. London, 1.

Hickok, Hickcox.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick. Hick (q.v.), and the augmentative Hickcock; cf. Wilcock, Wilcox, Jeffcock, and Cox; v. Cocks. Of course Hickcox stands for Hickcocks, the final s being the genitive form, as in Jones, Williams, &c. For further instances, v. Hitchcock, a weakened form.

London, 1, 0, 0; Philadelphia, 16, 3, 2.

Higdon.—? Bapt. 'the son of Higdon' (?). So the evidence seems to prove; but it has a very local appearance.

Higg, Higgs, Higson.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick. Higg, a lazy pronunciation of Hick. All the evidence required will be found under Hick and Higgin, q.v. Higson is the general variant of Hickson in South Lancashire. Higg, like Higgin, is found at an early period.

Higgate.—Local, 'of Highgate'; v. Hyett.

Philadelphia, 4.

Higgin, Higgins, Higginson, Higgens, Higgons, Higgon.—

Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick. Hick, which became Higg, and the dim. Hickin, which became Higgin; cf. Diggs and Dix, Wiggins and Wickins, Higginbotham and Hickinbotham, or Slagg and Slack; v. Hick for full history, and Hickin for further evidence.

The parent of Higgin, and all its descendants, is indisputably Hickin, the dim. of Hick, which means that Richard is the ancestor of all. I stated in my English Surnames (1875) that Isaac was the parent, giving my reasons. But I was altogether wrong, and I take this opportunity of apologizing for what at best was only a guess. For a brief time Hickin and Higgin ran alongside, but the lazier Higgin speedily won, and now as a surname Hickin is very rare.

Higginbotham, Higginbottom, Hickinbotham, Hickinbottom, Hickenbotham, Higgenbotam.—Local, 'of the Higginbottom,' a small spot, now, I believe, obsolete titularly, in the neighbourhood of Marple and Macclesfield, in East Cheshire.

The meaning, no doubt, is the bottom, or hollow depression in the land, where Higgin or Hickin resided; v. Higgin, Hickin, and Higg. In Mr. Earwaker's Hist. East Cheshire appear the names of John Rowbothome, John Sidebothome, and Ottiwell Heginbothome, as owners of land in 1672 (ii. 53 n.). There is no doubt this is the district where several of our most familiar surnames with suffix -bottom arose; v. Shufflebottom, Sidebottom, Longbottom, and Rowbottom; also v. Botham.

Hild.—Bapt. 'the son of Hilda' (v. Yonge, ii. 234-7). Found in such compounds as Hildebrand, Hildebert, Hildeman (v. Hillmer), Hildegard (v. Hilger), and in such place-names as Hildesley (v. Hildersley) or Hillersdon, once Hildesdon or Hilderston, all denoting tenancy by Hild or Hilda.

Hilder, Helder.—(1) Nick. 'the hilder,' i.e. the elder; cf. Senior, Younger, &c. 'Hilder, the elder, co. Norf.' (Halliwell). The aspirate is a matter of no moment as the Hundred Rolls (1273) put an initial h just as the registrar pleased. (2) But Mr. Lower, after quoting Halliwell, adds, 'But the Supp. to Aelfric's Vocab. says, "hyldere, lictor, vel vergifer," i.e. an usher or macebearer (Wright's Vocab. p. 60).'

Hildersley.—Local, 'of Hildersley.' 'Hildersley, a tithing in co. Glouc.' (Lower).

—de Hyldest, co. Glouc., 1273. A.

The personal name is not given, either because the page is undecipherable or torn. Thus Hildersley, more correctly Hildesley, means 'the meadow of Hilde'; v. Hild.

London, 6.

Hilditch, Hildick.—Local, 'of the hill-dike'; v. Dyke, and cf. Cobbledick for Cobbledike. Hilditch is a variant of Hildike, as ditch is of dike. The spot so named would seem to be on the border-land between Cheshire and Staffordshire.

Hill.—Local, 'at the hill,' from residence thereon. There is no necessity to explain why our directories team with Hills. As every village required its smith, and thus made Smith our great national occupative surname, so almost every small district had its rising ground called 'the hill,' the resident thereon taking his surname from it.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Hildegard' or 'Hildeward'; v. Hild. Also v. Yonge, ii. 235. 'Hildyard, formerly Hildheard, an ancient personal name. The family are said to have sprung from Robert Hildheard, of Normanby, co. York, in the year 1109.' So says Lower, quoting Burke's Landed Gentry. This family, however, as shown above, is of local origin. But I have found several entries that settle the point that in some cases these names are of baptismal origin.

Hinchcliffe, Hinchliff, Hinchliffe, Hinscliffe, Hinchcliff.—Local, 'of Hinchcliff,' now Hinchliff Mill, a spot in the township of Austonley, close to Holmforth, W. Rid. Yorks. The c in cliff is generally lost, as in Topcliff. There are two Hinchliffs and two Hinchliffes in the township of Austonley (v. West Riding Court Dir.). It is astonishing how sedentary some families are; v. Hardisty for a similar instance.

Such are the fluctuations of fortune in nomenclature.

Hoad.—Local; v. Hoath.

MDB. (co. Warwick), 1.

Hoadley.—Local, 'of Hoathley.' East and West Hoathley are parishes in co. Sussex. Of the truth of this derivation there can be no doubt.

Hobby.—(1) Local, 'of Hoby,' a parish in co. Leicester. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Robert,' from the nick. Hob, and pet Hobby or Hobbie. The local derivation is the more probable one. Hoby is found as Hobby in the following entry:

'The Right Hon. Charles. Earl of Manchester, bachelor . . . and the Hon. Dodington Grevill, spinster, about seventeen, her parents dead, and she at the disposal of Thomas Hobby, Esq., her father-in-law, who consents.' Feb. 19, 1690-1: Marriage Lic. (Faculty Office), p. 199.

Hobler.—Official, 'the hobler.' The hobler held tenure of his lands by maintenance of a hobby, or nag, which was to be used in the lord's service. He was a light horseman.

'As well hobellers as archers.'

Paston Letters (ed. 1841), ii. 154.

It is somewhat curious to read of a Hobler being a walker, but of course that refers to his occupation; v. Walker, and cf. Ambler.

Hockaday, Hockerday.—Bapt. 'the son of Hockday.' An ecclesiastical festival commencing the fifteenth day after Easter, styled Hokeday or Hocktide. The feast ceased to be observed after the Reformation (v. Brand's Pop. Ant. i. 107-13). The child would be so named from being born or baptized during this festival; cf. Christmas, Pask, Nowell, Pentecost, Whitsunday, &c. Pentecost is still a baptismal name in co. Cornwall, or was up to the beginning of the present century. The a in Hockaday is intrusive; cf. Green-a-way, Ott-a-way, &c.

Hodson. — (1) Bapt. 'the son of Roger,' from the nick. Hodge, when Hodgson, abbreviated to Hodson; cf. Dodson, from Dodgson; v. Hoddinson. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Odo,' from the nick. Oddy, sometimes Hoddy (q.v.), whence Odson or Hodson. There can be no doubt that Odo is the parent of many of our Hodsons. In Yorkshire it was for two centuries one of the most popular font-names for boys. The aspirate presents no difficulty.

Hoe.—Local, 'at the ho,' probably a form of Hoo, q.v.

Hoff.—Local; v. Huff.

MDB. (co. Lincoln), 1; New York, 24.

Hogard.—Occur; v. Hoggard.

Hogarth; v. Hoggarth.

Hogben.—?Local. I have no solution to offer. Mr. Lower writes, 'Probably a pigstye, from hog, and bin, a crib, a hutch. This Kentish surname was probably applied in the first instance to a swineherd' (Patr. Brit. p. 160). According to this suggestion the origin of Hogben is local, 'at the hog-bin.' This, of course, is very unsatisfactory. No evidence is advanced. I cannot help thinking it is an immigrant from the Low Countries. I find no early trace of it.

1786. Married—Samuel Ardron and Mary Bellamy Hogben: St. Geo. Han. Sp. i. 391.

1807.—John Francis Bonnet and Frances Hogben: ibid. ii. 366.

Hoggarth, Hogarth.—Occur, 'the hog-herd'; cf. Coward, Stoddart, Calvert, Swinnart. It is said that Hogarth the painter's name was originally Hoggart. Of course Hoggarth, i.e., 'at the hog-yard' or 'hog-garth,' would be a very natural local surname, but I do not find it; v. Hoggard for instances.

Hogsflesh.—Nick. This is a Sussex surname, and was very familiar at one time in Worthing and the surrounding district. A local jingle says:

'Worthing is a pretty place,
And if I'm not mistaken,
If you can't get butcher's meat,
There's Hogsflesh and Bacon.'

Charles Lamb chose the name Hogsflesh as the groundwork of his little comedy, 'Mr. H—'. Pigsflesh occurs as early as 1300.

Holbrook, Holebrook, Hullbrook.—Local, 'of Holbrook.' (1) A parish in co. Suffolk, six miles from Ipswich; (2) a parish in co. Derby, five miles from Derby. Both places seem to have given rise to a surname. Evidently there is a locality called Holbrook in the West country. Holbrook has ramified very strongly in the Puritan settlements of America.

Holdaway, Holdway.—Local. Probably 'at the old way,' from residence thereby. The aspirate presents no difficulty; cf. Holdam and Holberry. Local surnames with suffix -way, a road, are common in cos. Devon and Somerset. The intrusive a in Holdaway is for euphony; cf. Ottawa, Greenaway, Hathaway, &c.

MDB. (co. Southampton), 2, 4.

Holdcroft, Allcraft, Holdcroft, Holdcraft.—Local, 'of Holdcroft,' probably the croft in the hole or hollow; v. Croft or Craft, and Hole. Of course the d in Holdcroft and Holdcraft is excrement; cf. Simmonds for Simmons, or riband for ribbon.

Holden, Holding, Houlden, Howden, Houlding.—Local, 'of Holden.' This surname has spread all over the English-speaking world. Holden was an estate in the parish of Haslingden, co. Lanc. A family of that name early sprang from the place. The g in Holding and Houlding is excrement, as in Jennings, q.v. With Houlden or Howden, cf. Houldsworth for Holdsworth, or Coules for Coles.

Holdford, Holdforth, Holdford, Holdforth.—Local, 'of Holdford,' a parish in co. Somerset, ten miles from Bridgwater. For a second derivation of Holdford, v. Halford. With regard to the suffix -ford or -forth, v. Ford or Forth.

John de Holeford, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 164.

This entry suggests that Holdford was originally Holeford, i.e. the ford in the hollow; v. Hole. In such a case the d is intrusive.

Holdway; v. Holdaway.

Holdsworth, Houldsworth, Wholesworth, Holesworth.—(1) Local, 'of Halesworth,' a parish in co. Suffolk, early pronounced Haldsworth. (2) Local, 'of Haldsworth,' a spot in co. York which I have not identified. One thing is certain, the Lancashire and Yorkshire Holdsworths or Houldsworths are sprung from a family represented in the following entries:

John de Haldeworth, co. York, 1273. A. Johannes Haldeworthe, of Leathley, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 221.

Ricardus de Haldeworthe, of Southowram, 1379: ibid. p. 187.

Johannes de Halesworth, sutor, 1379: ibid.

Of the Suffolk surname the following are instances:

1374. Adam de Halesworth, prior, Norwich: FF. iv. 339.

1495. Richard Haldsworth, rector of Ridesworth, co. Norf.: ibid. i. 275.

1613. Robert Haldesworth, rector of Great Wrotham, co. Norf.: ibid. p. 467.

Of the Yorkshire surname the following are instances:

1593-4. Joshua Houldsworth, co. York: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. i. p. 108.

1595. Robert Haulsworth, or Houldsworth, co. York: ibid. p. 211.

1596. Henry Hauldesworth, co. York: ibid. p. 215.

1602. Michael Haldsworth, co. York: ibid. p. 259.

Thus the changes from Haldeworth or Haldsworth in the 13th century to Holdsworth or Houldsworth in the 19th are clearly marked at every stage.

Holl.—(1) Local, 'at the hole'; M.E. hol, the hollow, the cave; cf. Hoyle, a familiar Lancashire surname and a variant of Hole. The two undermentioned persons were residents in Sheffield:

Thomas atte Holl, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 44.

Alicia in le Hoyle, 1379: ibid.

The local connexion is incontestable.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Hoel'; v. Powell.

Jestyn ap Owen ap Holl: Visit. Glouc., Harl. Soc., p. 113.

Margaret Holl ap Rees ap Towdor: ibid. p. 114.

Of course (1) must be regarded as the true parent of the present surname.

Holland.—(1) Local, 'of Holland,' a settler in England from Holland. This is rare.

Johannes de Holand, 1379: ibid.

(2) Local, 'of Holland.' In general the surname takes its rise from the two Hollands in co. Lanc.—viz. Down Holland, a township in the parish of Halsall, and Up Holland, a township in the parish of Wigan. Among the townspeople of strictly indigenous growth who were on the roll of the Preston Guild Merchant (A.D. 1397) appears 'Robert de Holand' (Preston Guild Rolls, p. 1).

'Thomas de Lathom, chevalier, Robert de Holand, chevalier . . . hold of John de Ware, one knight's fee' (in Childwall, Turton, &c.): Knights' Fees, 23 Edw. III, Baines' Lanc. ii. 694.

'Holand, a priory of Blake Monkes, a ii miles from Wigan': Leland.

In Lancashire this surname has ramified marvellously, and has spread all over the world.

Hollings; v. Hollins.

Hollingshead, Hollinshead.

—Local, 'of the hollins head,' i.e. one who dwelt at the head of the hollin-bushes; cf. Akenhead (the head of the oaks), Birkenhead, and Birkett = Birkhead (the head of the birches). A resident by the side of the oaks gave us Akenside, q.v. -head and -side are common suffixes to local names of this class. The form Holinshead was made early immortal by the Chronicler. East Cheshire has given birth to a large number of Hollingsheads from some immediate locality of that name. v. Hollins.

Hollowell; v. Halliwell.

Hollyer, Hollier.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Oliver,' from the modified Ollier, q.v. Aspirates present no difficulty, as will be seen from a perusal of letter 'H.' (2) Local, 'the hollyer,' one who dwelt by the holly-bushes; cf. Bridger or Holmer. Of course Hillier (q.v.) may be the parent.

London, 2, 1; MDb. (co. Kent), 1, 0; (co. Leic.), 0, 2.

Hollyman, Holleyman, Holman, Holeyman, Holliman, Holloman, Holyman.—(1) Nick. 'the holy man,' i.e. the priest, the friar. With Hollyman, cf. Hollywell, or hollyhook and holiday. The shorter Holman must be referred to M.E. hool or hol, holy without the suffix -y. (2) Local, 'the holly-man,' the man who dwelt by the holly-bushes; cf. Bridgman, Heathman, &c.; v. Hollyer. But (1) is manifestly the chief parent.

London, 6, 1, 22, 1, 1, 1, 1.

Hollywell.—Local; v. Halliwell.

Holm, Holme, Holmes, Holms, Home, Homes.—Local, 'at the holm,' from residence upon a holm, an islet in, or a flat land beside, a river. The word as a place-name is common all over England. In my old parish (Ulverston, North Lanc.) is an Appletree-holm in the river Crake. 'Holm, place besydone a water; hulmus': Prompt. Parv. The word is sometimes found spelt home or holms. 'Homes, probably holms, which signified originally river-islands' (Kennett).

Holyoake, Holyoak.—Local, 'at the holly-oak.' Mr. Lower says this is from residence by some oak-tree to which sanctity was attached, and asserts, without furnishing instances, that in early charters it is Latinized as 'de sacra quercu.' The origin seems to be simply residence by the holly-oak, now generally holm-oak ('Holme or holly, ulmus, hussus': Prompt. Parv.), so called from the resemblance of its leaf to the holly; cf. Rowntree, Crabtree, Ash, Nash, Oake, Nokes, &c.

Holypeter, Hollopeter.—Nick, 'Holy Peter'; cf. Holyfather. Thus we have such sobriquets as Littlejohn, Micklejohn, &c. It is curious to find the presence in America of a surname apparently extinct in England. But this is constantly occurring.

William Halupetir, co. Hunts, 1273. A. Philadelphia, 0, 2.

Holywaterclerk.—Offic. 'the holy water clerk.'

Hugh Hali-watere-clerk, 1313. M.

Homan.—Occup. 'the man of How,' i.e. the servant of Hugh, dialectically How; v. Howson; cf. Matthewman, Addyman, Bartleman, Hobman, Dickman, Harri-man, &c.

Hood.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick. Hud or Hood, as suggested by the writer of the article 'Robin Hood,' Encyc. Brit. (vol. xx. p. 606, edit. 1886).

But Hud is not a nick, of Odo, as he asserts, following Lower (Patr. Brit.; v. Hood), but of Richard. For proofs, v. Hudd. The entries of Hud are endless in old rolls and records. It must not be forgotten that 'A Lyttell Geste of Robin Hode' spells it thus, which is not far from Hud in sound.

Hopcraft, -croft.—Local; v. Hobcroft.

Hope, Hopes.—Local, (1) 'at the hope,' from residence thereby; a sloping hollow between two hills was called a 'hope,' (2) Parishes so called (probably with a similar origin) in cos. York, Derby, Kent, and Hereford. As a suffix we find hope in such place-names as Stanhope or Harrop; as an affix in Hopcroft, Hopton, Hopley, or Hopwood.

Hopewell.—Local, 'at the hope-well,' that is, the well or spring by the hope; v. Hope. The Puritan font-name Hopewell came too late to influence surnames, but, failing evidence in favour of a local origin, it might be an early nickname for one of a hopeful disposition. Nevertheless, although I find no trace of the surname in Derbyshire, it must be remembered that Hopewell is a liberty in the parish of Sawley in that county.

Hopley.—Local, 'of Hopley.' There is Hopley's Green, a township in the parish of Almeley, co. Hereford, but I suspect we must seek for the place further north. Co. Chester seems to be the home of the family. The meaning is 'the meadow in the hope'; v. Hope and Ley.

Horn, Horne.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Horn.' Beyond a doubt a personal name. Lower says, 'One Alwin Horne held lands in Middlesex and Herts before the making of Domesday. Horn is a personal name of great antiquity, and is borne by the hero of a celebrated old English and French romance. For his history, see Wright's Essays, i. 3.' Hornbuckle.—? Local. This looks uncommonly like a nickname, but I cannot help thinking it is an imitative corruption of Harbottle, q.v. It is found in cos. Lincoln and Norfolk. In 1581 John Har-bottle was bailiff of Yarmouth (v.
FF. xi. 328). Additional evidence in favour of this view is found in the fact that Arbuckle is one of the familiar surnames in Northumberland, where Harbottle lies; v.

Hornby, Hornsby.—Local,
'of Hornby,' parishes in cos. Lanc.
and York, probably from Horn,
the name of the settler; v. Horn.
As the knowledge of place-names increases, it will be made more and more clear how large a proportion of them are styled after the personal name of the first resident. Hornsby stands to Hornby as Huddersfield to Hudderfield (the earliest spelling), or Holdsworth to Holdworth.

Hornyhold, Hornyold, Horn-nigold.—Local, 'of Horninghold,' a parish in co. Leicester, four miles from Uppingham. Mr. Lower writes: 'Hornyold. The first recorded ancestor is John de Horny-old, temp. Edw. III. Local place unknown' (Patr. Brit. p. 163). Of course it is Horninghold in Leicestershire, the settlement of the family of Horn (v. Horn); cf. the place-names Horningsea, Horning-low, Horningsham, Horningheath, or Horningtoft.

Horobin, Harrobin.—Local,
'of Horobin.' I believe this is a small spot in the parish of Taxal, co. Derby. The following entries clearly prove that Horobin and Harrobin are one and the same name:

John Horabin, of Westhoughton, 1591:
Wills at Chester (1545-1620), p. 101.

Thomas Horabin, of Bolton, 1612: ibid.

Horrocks, Horrox, Horrex.—Local, 'of Horrocks,' probably the spot known as Horrocksford Hall, in the parish of Clitheroe, co. Lanc. The tendency of surnames to corrupt as they get further from their native home is shown in Horrox and Horrex (London Dir.), which are unknown in Lancashire; cf. Dixon and Dickson.

Horscraft, Horscroft.—Local, 'at the horse-croft'—nothing to do with farriery; v. Craft, Meadowcraft, Haycraft, &c. Possibly in some cases a corruption of house-croft, 'the field beside the house.' This name occurs early:

Johannes de Huscroft, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 106.

But 'horse-croft,' the enclosure for horses, is the true parent.

Horsfall.—Local, 'at the hors-fall,' probably the hoarse fall, the loud, harsh cataract; M.E. hors, horse, hoarse. But cf. Yorks. dial. Hose, Horse, a deep vale between two mountains (Hutton, Tour to Caves), and fall, a valley, 'hanger' (Lucas, Nidderdale). The surname has spread far and wide in cos. York and Lancaster. The spot itself seems to have lain in the old parish of Halifax.

Horsfield, Horsefield.—Local, 'at the horse-field,' an enclosure for horses. The parentage is clearly North English, but I cannot find the spot. It will probably be found in Yorkshire, as I find no Lancashire records.

Horsford.—Local, 'of Horsford,' a parish in co. Norfolk, four miles from Norwich. But 'the horse ford' would naturally be a common place-name, and several spots may have given birth to the surname. The surname in the North of England springs from Horsforth, a chapelry in the parish of Guiseley, near Leeds; v. Ford and Forth.

Horsman; v. Horseman.

Horsnail, Horsnail, Horsnell.—? Local. I give this up; but I feel sure it is of local origin. Mr. Ferguson's idea, that it may 'refer to one who was as swift-footed as a horse,' connecting it, I presume, with snel (v. Snell), quick, active, is not good enough.

London, 1, 0; Plymouth, 1, 3.

Horton.—Local, 'of Horton': (1) a township in the parish of Bradford, Yorks; (2) a township in the parish of Gisburn, Yorks; (3) Horton-in-Ribblesdale, near Settle, co. Yorks. This surname has strongly ramified in the United States. From the earlier entries it would seem that some other spots similarly styled, parents of surnames, existed in South England.

1799. Married—Charles Hose and Sarah Grimsdale: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 209.

Mr. Lower says (Patr. Brit. p. 163), 'Hose, the garment.' This does not help much to the derivation of the name.

London, 3; New York, 3.

Hosegood, Hosgood, Horsegood.—Bapt. 'the son of Osgod': v. Osgood. The aspirate got into these names very early; cf. Hoddy for Oddy, and such an entry as this:

Hosken, Hoskin, Hosking, Hoskins.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Osmund,' or 'Osgood,' or 'Osborne.' There can be little doubt about this derivation. The aspirate is commonly found in names beginning with vowels; cf. Hoddy for Oddy, or Hosgood for Osgood, or Hodson for Odson. This being settled the rest is easy. Oskin must be a dim. like Wilkin or Watkin, and the only question is, Was it a dim. of Osmund, Osgood, or Osborne? The g in Hosking is excrement.

Osekin (without surname), London, 1273. A.

Robert Osekin, London, ibid.

(2) ? Bapt. 'the son of Roger,' from nick. Hodge, dim. Hodgekin, corruptly pronounced Hotchkiss, then Hoskin, with excrement g Hosking. I merely suggest this as a possibility. All evidence is in favour of (1).

London, 2, 1, 12, 14; MDB. (co. Cornwall), 7, 17, 9, o.

Hotchkin, Hotchkiss.—Bapt. 'the son of Roger,' from nick. Hodge, dim. Hodgekin, patronymic Hodgekins, corruptly Hotchkiss; cf. Popkiss, Purkiss, &c. For instances of the more correct forms, v. Hodgkin.

Hough, Houfe.—Local, 'of the hough.' The same word as haugh or how, a hill, a mound (v. How). 'A hollow or dell. North' (Halliwell). There is a hamlet called Hough-end in the parish of Bramley, near Leeds. Houfe is a curious corruption, but not unlike the instance below (v. also Huff). Of the Cheshire and South Lancashire Houghs nearly all hail from Hough, now called 'the hough,' a portion of the parish of Wilmslow, co. Ches.

Houston.—Local, 'of Houston.' Mr. Lower writes, 'The ancient knightly family so called originally bore the name of Paduinan from a place in co. Lanark. In the 12th cent. Hugh de P. acquired the lands of Kilpeter, and built a residence there, to which he gave the name of Hugh's Town, now Houston, co. Renfrew. His descendants of that ilk borrowed their surname from it' (Patr. Brit. p. 164). Like many another Scotch name, it is well represented in the United States.

Howard.—There are two distinct origins of the surname Howard, one official, the other baptismal; one representing the once familiar office of Hayward (q.v.), the other representing the still earlier personal name Hereward. Both of these names, totally distinct in origin, had a determined bias towards the form Howard, and in time reached it. The hogward theory needs no arguments to refute it. But I may say in passing that our Hoggarts are the natural descendants of the hogherd, for that and not hogward was his name. I will first deal with the official name. (1) Official, 'the hayward,' i.e. the custodian of the fences, from hay or haw, a hedge, and ward, a guardian.

'Edward Howard, or Heyward's gift to this parish is £3 per annum, given to the poor in bread,' 1663. St. Swithin's Ch., Norwich: ibid. iv. 256.

It is clear that if Hayward was also pronounced Haward, the further step to Howard would be inevitable. I do not think, however, that more than a small proportion of our Howards are thus sprung, as Hayward became the settled form in nomenclature and is so found in all our directories. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Heward.' The different stages of this personal name seem to have been Hereward, Harward, Haward or Heward, and Howard. It is commonly found in the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries, and had become a surname when the Hundred Rolls were compiled. Most of our Howards are unquestionable descendants of the personal name.

Item, to Heyward Skynner, ca. 1503: Privy Purse Exp., Eliz. of York, p. 100.

The evidence given above is absolutely conclusive. Hewardard was the same as Heward, and Heward as Howard. The case of Heyward Skynner is curious, as it has got confounded with the occupative or official Hayward. It is interesting to notice that the 'Norfolk Howards' are found as Haward, one more link of importance.

'Item, to my Lord Haward, cxxi', 1503: Privy Purse Exp., Eliz. of York, p. 99.

Another connexion seems to be found in the following:

1565-6. Henry Hawarde, Esq., son of Sir Thomas Hawarde, Viscount Bindon, and Frances Mewtys: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 32.

A note says, 'Succeeded in 1582 as Viscount Howard, of Bindon.' I leave to genealogists the task of deciding whether the Duke of Norfolk's name belongs to (1) or (2). I should say (2), and make him a direct descendant of Hereward the Wake. I dare say his Grace would offer no objections. It is the double origin, of course, that has made Howard so familiar a surname throughout England, London, 141.

Howarth, Howorth.—Local, 'of Howarth,' an estate in the parish of Rochdale, co. Lanc. Howorth and Haworth (q.v.) are inextricably mixed.

Hozier.—Occup. 'the hosier'; v. Hosier.

Hubbard; v. Hubert.

Hubbardine.—Bapt. 'the son of Hubbard' (Hubert), from dim. Hubbardin; v. Heberden. There is a strong letter of Bishop Latimer's to one Hubbardine or Hubbardin, an opponent of the Reformation (Latimer's Remains, Parker Soc. pp. 319-20). Now often spelt Hibberdine and Heberden; cf. Hubbard, Hebard, and Hibbard.

Hubbersty, Hubberstey, Hubersty.—Local, 'of Hubbersty.' I have not identified the spot. It seems to be in North Lancashire. Of course the root is sty, as in Thorpinsty Hall in the same district; v. Turpin. As Thorpinsty took its name from the original proprietor Thorfin, so Hubbersty will represent the original proprietor Hubert.

Hubert, Hubbard, Hubbert, Hubberd, Hobart.—Bapt. 'the son of Hubert' (St. Hubert, patron of hunters; v. Yonge, ii. 302). Once very popular as Hubbard and Hubberd. 'Old Mother Hubbard' may have represented a feminine form. There were sure to have been plenty of Hubertas who would be Hubbard in common life.

London, 5.

Huckin, Hukin, Hukins, Hukins, Hukings.—Bapt. 'the son of Hugh,' from dim. Hugh-kin (v. Huggins); cf. Wilkin, Tomkin, &c. The g in Hukings is excrement, as in Jennings, Hewlings, &c. These names have all but entirely been lost in Huggin and Huggins (q.v.). The parentage is the same; cf. Hickson and Higson, Hickins and Higgins, &c.

Hudd, Huddy, Hudson.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' of a strange North-English nick, of Richard, taken from the second syllable. In the Close Roll, 20 Edw. III, part i, occurs amongst several Lancashire names 'Matthew de Sutheworth dictus Maykyn,' and 'Ricardus dictus Hudde de Walkden.' In both cases the familiar and everyday form of the Christian name is added. In Gower's Latin verses on Wat Tyler's insurrection all the nick-forms of the common names of the day are introduced—Wat, Tom, Sim, Bat, Gib, Hick, Col, Bob, Will, Grig, Davie, Hob, Larkin, Jud, Jib, Jack, and Hud:

'Hudde ferit, quem Judde terit, dum Tibbe juvatur,
Jacke domosque viros vellit, en ense necat.'

It is manifest that Richard must be included, as being about the fourth name in the list of frequency. In place of Dick, Hud is recorded; cf. also Ricardus de Knaptun and Cristiana Hud-wyf, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 294. That the form was familiar Hudde de Knaresborough (E.), Hudde Garcio de Stabulo (DD.), Richard Hudeson (H.), and John Hudeson (W. 2), prove. All these entries are found in the North.

Huggins, Hugginson, Huggons.—Bapt. 'the son of Hugh,' dim. Hug-in or Hug-on; cf. Col-in, Jen-in (now Jennings), Lamin, &c.; also cf. Gibbins and Gibbons from Gilbert. 'Hugyn held of the same Earl an ox gang of land' (De Lacy Inquisition, Cheth. Soc. p. 6). The French fondness for double diminutives gave them the famous name Huguenot (Hug-in-ot), so that we must trace that religious sect to an individual, if we would get at its origin.

Hugh, Hughes.—Bapt. 'the son of Hugh.' It would be impossible to overrate the influence of Hugh (M.E. Hew in North, How in South) on our English nomenclature. Thousands of people owe their nominal existence to it. It had pet and diminutive forms of every guise, as in Hewett and Howitt, Hewlett and Howlett, Hewling and Howling, Huggin and Huckin, Houchin and Howchin, Hutchins and Hutchinson, and many others. Hugh had an early start, for it is found in considerable strength in Domesday. St. Hugh of Cluny, St. Hugh of Grenoble, St. Hugh, Bishop of Lincoln, above all, the infant martyr, St. Hugh of Lincoln, said to have been crucified by the Jews about 1250, all gave impetus to the use of it. It became popular in Wales, and Hughes and Pugh (ap-Hugh) were the result.

Humby.—Local, 'of Humby.'

Great Humby is a chapelry in the parish of Sowerby, co. Lincoln; Little Humby is a hamlet in the parish of Ropsley, co. Lincoln.

MDb. (co. Dorset), 4; London, 4.

Hume, Humes, Hulme,

Hulmes, Hum.—Local, 'of

Hulme.' There are several townships so called in cos. Lanc. and Ches., the meaning is the same as Holm, q.v., and cf. Home and Hume: in both cases the l is elided.

Humfress, Humfrey.—Bapt. 'the son of Humphrey'; patr. Humphreys (v. Humphery).

London, 2, 3.

Humpage.—? —. Can it be a corruption of Humfress (q.v.)? Otherwise I think it must be the 'home-page,' the indoor servant; cf. Housecarl, Littlepage, Smallpage, Bowerman, Ladyman, &c.

MDb. (co. Glouc.), 1; London, 1; Manchester, 1.

Humpherson.—Bapt. 'the son of Humphrey.' A variant of Humphreyson.

1763. Married—John Higgins and Eliz. Humpherson: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 122. London, 1; MDb. (co. Worc.), 1.

Humphery, Humphrey, Humphreys, Humphreyson, Humphries, Humphris, Humphriss, Humphry, Humphrys.—Bapt. 'the son of Humphrey.' The spelling of this name varied much; more frequently than not there was no aspirate. Sometimes also it is set down as Unfrey, but the interchange of courtesies between n and m is common in nomenclature; cf. Ransom for Ranson or, more correctly, Randson.

Hundleby, Hondleby.—Local, 'of Hundleby,' a parish in co. Lincoln, one mile from Spilsby.

MDb. (co. Lincoln), 2, 1.

Hundley.—Local; v. Huntley.

Hundred, Hundredth, Hundreder.—(1) Local, 'at the hundred,' i.e. the county division; M.E. hundreth. (2) Offic. 'the bailiff of the hundred.'

Geoffrey le Hundreder, C.R., 45 Hen. III. Helyas le Hunderd, co. Hunts, 1273. A. Geoffrey atte Hundrethe, Close Roll, 7 Edw. II.

'The hundred is a subdivision of a county, so called either because each old hundred or ten tithings found 100 fidejussors of the King's Peace, or else because it found 100 able men for war.' All persons fit to serve on juries 'were called Hundredors (hundredarii). Hundredor was sometimes applied to the bailiff of a hundred. Each hundred had its independent court' (Intro. to Pipe Rolls, p. 84, P.R.S.).

Hundredpound.—Nick. Probably a direct translation of the French Centlivre. William Hundredpound was mayor of Lynn Regis, in Norfolk, in the year 1417 (v. Index, Blomefield's Norfolk). And now comes a curious coincidence, if it be not something more. Susanna Centlivre, the dramatic author who died in 1723, was brought up at Lynn Regis (v. Dict. Nat. Biog.). It is true that her husband, Joseph Centlivre, was cook-in-chief to Queen Anne, and it was some years after her public appearance that she married him. Still it seems possible that she may have met him in childhood in the neighbourhood of Lynn Regis, and that Hundredpound had been restored by the descendants of the old mayor into French again. The name of Centlivre survived. Cf. Whitbread for Blanchpain, Handsome-bread for Gentileors, &c.

Grace Centlivre, co. Surrey (v. Index to Hist. and Ant. Surrey). Joseph Centlivre, co. Surrey, ibid.

Hunnybun; v. Honeybourne.

Hunsley.—Local, 'of Hunsley,' a township in the parish of Rowley, E. Rid. Yorks.

MDb. (East Rid. Yorks), 1.

Hunsworth.—Local; v. Unsworth.

Philadelphia, 8.

Hunt, Hunte.—Occup. and offic. 'the hunt,' a huntsman; M.E. hunte, a hunter (this latter being a later form). This is proved incidentally by the fact that there are four columns of Hunt in the London Directory to one of Hunter.

'A halpeny the hunte takes on the day For every hound the sothe to say.'

Old Poem.

Huntbach.—Local, 'of Huntbach.' I cannot find the place; cf. Sandbach, Comberbach, &c., all in co. Chester or the immediate district.

Manchester, 1; MDb. (co. Chester), 2.

Hunter.—Occup. or offic. 'the hunter.' The earlier form is hunte; v. Hunt. While Hunt is very common I can only find one Hunter in the Hundred Rolls (1273). It became popular soon after, however, as our directories clearly prove.

Huntington, Huntingdon.—Local, (1) 'of Huntingdon'; (2) 'of Huntington,' parishes in cos. Hereford and York. There can be little doubt that some of our Huntingtons are sprung from Huntingdon, the sharpened form being more popular.

Huntsman.—(1) Occup. 'the hunt-man,' from hunt, a hunter, and the augmentative man; cf. merchant-man or husband-man. (2) Occup. 'the hunt-man,' i.e. the man (=servant) of the hunt, the servant of the hunter; v. Hunt; cf. Matthewman, Vickerman, Priestman, Addyman, &c. Huntman was gradually assimilated to the familiar dictionary form huntsman.

Hurditch.—Local, 'of Hurd-wich,' the dwelling or farmstead of the 'herd,' a keeper of cattle. It is clear from my references that -wick or -wich and not -ditch is the suffix; cf. the pronunciation of Norwich; v. Wick. Evidently a West-country name. It may be observed that Hurd, and not Herd, is found in co. Somerset; v. Herd.

Hurle.—Local; v. Hurrell.

Hurley, Hurly.—Local, 'of Hurley,' a parish in co. Berks, near Maidenhead. This surname is very strongly represented in the New York Directory, but as Dennis, Michael, Cornelius, Patrick, and other popular Irish personal names are generally found as the prefix, it is hardly necessary to state that a large number of the instances are of Hibernian origin. Their derivation, therefore, must be sought for in that country.

Ibb, Ibbs, Ibson, Ibson, Ibbison. — Bapt. 'the son of Isabel,' from the nick. Ibb. Although common to England, Yorkshire is the great centre of these forms, where Isabelle was the rival of Matilda in the surname period. Ibson becomes Ibison or Ibson, just as Greenway becomes Greenaway; v. Ebbs. The diminutive forms, however, have made the greatest impress on our directories; v. Ibbett.

Johannes Ibson, 1379: P.T. Yorks. p. 293. Thomas Ibson, 1379: ibid. p. 111. 1640. Married—William Ibson and Eliz. Pickring: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 73. 1800. — Robert Giles Ibbs and Mary Mathews: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 212. London, o, 2, o, o, 1; West Rid. Court Dir., o, o, o, 1, o; Leeds (Ibbison), 1; Huddersfield (Ibson), 2; New York (Ibson), 1.

Ibberson, Ipperson.—Bapt. 'the son of Isabel,' modifications or corruptions of Ibbotson (v. Ibbett). This is easily proved by instances, although none are needed. Ipperson is a sharpened form; cf. Epps for Ebbs.

George Ibberson, parish of Garstang, 1748: Lanc. Wills at Richmond, ii. 147. 1753. Married—John Iberson and Frances Stapleton: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 245. 1765. — Andrew Rohl and Olive Ibberson: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 145.

The following entries concern Roger Ibbotson's children:

1611. Bapt.—Margaret, d. Roger Ipperson: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 63. 1614. — Barnaby, d. Roger Ibbatson: ibid. p. 70. 1620. — Prudence, d. Roger Ipperson: ibid. p. 89. West Rid. Court Dir., 4, o; MDB. (co. Hunts), 3, o; New York, 1, o.

Ibbett, Ibbetson, Ibbitt, Ibbison, Ibbot, Ibbotson.—Bapt. 'the son of Isabel,' from the nick. Ibb and dim. Ibb-ot or Ibb-et. From Yorkshire down to Cornwall this was the favourite nurse-name of Isabel. But Yorkshire has the honour of originating several leading representatives of this list. Ibbotson is found in every village and town. I could furnish shoals of instances of Ibbot or Ebbot (v. Eb-betts) as girls' names in that county, but must be content with a few.

Ibot Baker, 1379: ibid. p. 27. Ibota Waferer, 1379: ibid. p. 26. Robertus Ibbotson, 1379: ibid. p. 67. Matilda Ibot, daughter, 1379: ibid. p. 172. Willelmus Kene, et Ibota uxor ejus, 1379: ibid. p. 197. Ibbota fil. Adoe, co. York. W. 2. Ibote Babyngton, temp. Eliz. Z.

In Cornwall, the last home of pre-Reformation diminutives, Ibot or Ebot was used as a font-name till the end of the 17th century.

1579. Bapt.—Ibbett, d. Richard Sprey: St. Columb Major, p. 10.

Ibbinson, Ibinson. — Bapt. 'the son of Isabel,' from the nick. Ibb and dim. Ibb-in; cf. violin from viol or Colin from Col, the nick. of Nicholas; or Robin from Rob, the nick. of Robert.

1642. Bapt.—Allyce, d. William Ibbinson: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 153.

1780. Married—Richard Ibbinson and Betty Munden: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 317. MDB. (co. Lancaster), o, 1.

Ibbison, Ibbs, Ibson, Ibbson; v. Ibb.

Ibbot, Ibbotson; v. Ibbett.

Ichenard, Ignard, Inard; v. Inward.

Icke, Ick, Ickes.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick. Hick, q.v. The surname seems to have lost its aspirate. With Ickes, cf. Hicks.

MDB. (co. Stafford), 2, o, o, 0; (co. Sussex), o, 1, o; Philadelphia, o, o, 2.

Iddison, Iddeson, Ideson, Ide.—Bapt. 'the son of Idonia,' from the nick. Ide or Idde, whence Iddeson. Sometimes, no doubt, a corruption of Idonson (v. Iddon), of which I have supplied several instances below. The root origin is the same in either case.

William Ide, co. Camb., 1273. A. Agnes Ydd-maydon (i.e. the maid of Idd), 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 132. Ricardus Iddeson, 1379: ibid. p. 197. Thomas Iddeson, 1379: ibid. p. 55. Willelmus Idoynson, 1379: ibid. p. 292. 1599. Anthony Ide and Margaret Sorrell: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 262. Idde Peadie, widow, 1665: Reg. St. Mary Aldermay (London), p. 185. Iddols.—?—. Possibly baptismal from some forgotten personal name. In that case Iddols is the genitive; cf. Jones, Williams, &c.

1620. Richard Vawcill and Frances Iddoll: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 86. MDB. (co. Wilts), 2.

Iddon, Idone.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Idonia,' once an extremely common font-name in Yorkshire. The nick. of this was Idon; for instances, v. Iddison.

Idiens.—?—. I cannot suggest any derivation.

MDB. (co. Stafford), 3.

Idle, Idell.—Local, 'of Idle,' a township and village in the parish of Calverley, W. Rid. Yorks. It is curious to note that while the United States have rejected Idle, and retained the more accurate Idell, they have got a surname Idler, q.v.

Matilda de Ydell, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 100.

Johannes de Idill, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 191.

1600. William Idill, or Idle, co. York, Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii, pt. ii, p. 241.

1647. Bapt.—Charles, s. Christopher Idle: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 167.

1719–20. John Idell and Ann Washington: Marriage Lic. (Faculty Office), p. 249.

London, 3, 0; Leeds, 2, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 18.

Idler, Ideler.—?—. I have no suggestion to offer concerning the derivation of this American surname. I do not think it is a nickname. Probably a variant of Adler, of which there are eleven instances in the Boston and twenty-six in the Philadelphia Directory. This Adler is almost certainly the German Adelgar.

Philadelphia, 7, 0.

Ifold, Ifould, Ifill.—Local, 'of Ifield,' parishes in cos. Kent and Sussex. With the corrupted Ifill, cf. Hatfull for Hatfield, q.v.

1793. Married—William Ifold and Hannah Lane: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 90.

1795.—John Ifold and Susanna Maling: ibid. p. 129.

Iggulden, Iggalden, Igglesden.—Local, 'of Ingleden,' i.e. the dene or dean (valley) of Ingle, the first settler. I cannot find the place. v. Ingold and Ingle.

Robert de Incledene, co. Devon, 1273. A.

Cf. Inkersole for Ingersoll, q.v. That this is the parent there cannot be the slightest doubt.

Ilbert.—Bapt. 'the son of Ilbert,' a somewhat rare personal name found in the 12th and 13th centuries. It managed, however, to secure surnominal honours, and thus lives on in our directories, though I fear it is obsolete as a fontal name.

London, 1.

Illes.—Local; v. Isles.

Ilgar, Ilger.—Bapt. 'the son of Hildegard.' The first modification was Hilger, then Ilger. I fear the surname is obsolete in this form, but it survives in Elgar, q.v.

Ilting.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Aylwin,' q.v. We similarly find Iliff (q.v.) for Ailof. The g, if the derivation be true, is excrement, as in Jennings, Hewling, &c.

Walter Illing, co. Leic., 1273. A.

(2) Local, 'of Illing.' I cannot find the spot.

Robert de Ylinge, co. Kent, 1273. A.

Illingworth, Illingsworth.—Local, 'of Illingworth,' a chapelry in the parish of Halifax, W. Rid. Yorks. The American form is generally Illingsworth. No doubt the form Inglesworth is the correct one, implying not the 'worth' or farmstead in some local ingles or nook, but the 'worth' or farmstead of Ingle the original settler; a Scandinavian personal name; v. Ingle.

Ilott.—(1) Local (?), 'at the islet,' from residence thereon; v. Isles. (2) Bapt.; v. Aylett, and cf. Iliff and Illing. This second derivation is the most probable.

William Ilot, co. Suff., 1273. A.
1612. Buried—A child still-born to

Imm, Imms, Im, Imeson,
Im, Imeson, Impson.—Bapt.
'the son of Emma,' from the nick.
Em changed to Im. Thus Imeson is but a variant of Empson, q.v., Im or Imm of Emm or Emme, and Im or Imms of Emms, q.v.
There cannot be a doubt about this derivation; cf. Ibbett and Ebbetts or Izard and Ezard. With the American Impson, cf. Thompson or Simpson.

Immins, Immings.—Bapt.
'the son of Imayne'; v. Emeny.
An interesting relic of an old and forgotten personal name. Immins is the genitive form; cf. Jones, Williams, &c. The g in Immings as in Jennings is an excrescence.

Impett.—Bapt. (?), 'the son of Imbert,' q.v. The corruption would easily occur. The first variant would be Impert, then Impet or Impit. In the same way
Epps stands for Ebbs.

1695. Buried—Ann Impitt, widow:

Impey.—Local, 'of Impey.'
Mr. Lower says, 'This name is or has been numerous in cos. Bucks, Surrey, and Essex, in which last county stands Impey Hall' (Patr.
Brit. p. 168). I doubt not this is the true spot.

the case in surnames, I has become the initial in place of E; cf. Ebbot and Ibbott, Emms and Imms, Empson and Imeson, Ebbs

Inch.—Local, 'of Inch' or 'of the Inch,' a Scottish surname.
Several parishes, &c., so called are in that country. Inch signifies island, or level ground contiguous to a river (Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 168);
cf. Inch Island (Taylor's Words and Places, second edit. p. 213).

1563. Buried—Elyn Ynch, apprentice with

Ind.—Probably local, 'attendant,' from residence at the end of a row of cottages, or the end of the road, whence Nind, q.v.; cf. Nash, Noakes, &c. If this be true, which is likely, then end must have been popularly pronounced Ind, which is not improbable; cf. Nangle for 'atten-angle,' one who lived in the corner of the road or buildings. The following seems to have got an aspirate; but this is very common at the period:

1340. John Atte-hinde, rector of Burnham Up. Norf.: FF. vii. 32.
1667. Bapt.—Thomas, s. Thomas Inde: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 232.

Ineson.—Bapt. 'the son of Idonia,' a favourite Yorkshire font-name in 13th and 14th centuries. There were two nicks, one Ide from the first syllable, the other Ine from the second syllable, one giving us Iddison (q.v.), the other Ineson.

Inge, Inge, Ings, Indge.—(1) Local, 'of the ing,' 'Ing, a meadow, generally one lying low near a river. North' (Halliwell); cf. Ingmere Hall, situated by the Lune at Sedbergh. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Inge' (v. Yonge, ii. 248). Image, son of Harald, was King of Norway in the 12th century. Compounded with Ing were such personal names as Ingram, Inger, Ingle, and Ingold, q.v.

Ingall.—Bapt.; v. Ingle.

Ingaltan.—Local, 'of Ingletan,' i.e. the town of Ingold, popularly Ingle; v. Ingle and Ingletan. MDB. (co. Bucks), 2.

Ingamells.—Local, 'of Ingoldmells,' a parish in co. Lincoln, five miles from Burgh. Of course it was impossible for the name to be conversationally so pronounced. It was too much trouble. Thus it has become Ingamells. It is still closely attached as a surname to the county. In the following entry it is curiously corrupted to Ingarnells, or perhaps it is misprinted.

1798. Married—Thomas Ingarnells and Hannah Hooper: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 277.

MDB. (co. Lincoln), 12; London, 2.

Inge; v. Inge.

Inger, Ingeron.—Bapt. 'the son of Ingvar,' a Scandinavian personal name founded on the root Ing, q.v.; cf. the local surname Ingerthorp, i.e. the thorp of Inger, the name of the first settler. As a fontal name Inger is found at the close of the 15th century.

Ingerfield, Ingarfield.—Local, 'of Ingerfield,' literally the 'field of Inger,' the first settler. I do not know the spot; v. Inger. No doubt sometimes the 'field of Ingle'; v. Ingle. The name Ingerfield would be sure to become Ingerfield in popular parlance; v. Ingerfield. Cf. Ingerthorp.

London, o, 2.

Ingersoll, Ingersaul, Inkersoll, Inkersole.—Local, 'of Ingersaul,' i.e. the saule or sale of Inger; v. Inger and Sale or Saul (2). Similarly we find in the London Directory Plimsoll and Plimsaul, where the same suffix occurs. Where the spot is I cannot say. Sale, a hall (Fr. salle), is commonly found in the 12th, 13th, and 14th century registers. With the sharpened form Inkersoll, cf. Inkerfield for Ingerfield (q.v.).

Ingham.—Local, 'of Ingham.'

(1) A parish in co. Lincoln, eight miles from Lincoln; (2) a parish in co. Norfolk, near Stalham; (3) a parish in co. Suffolk, four miles from Bury St. Edmunds. Literally the 'homestead of Ing,' the original settler; v. Ing (2). Doubtless many smaller spots would be so termed. The surname has ramified strongly in Yorkshire.

Ingledeu, Engeldow, Engledew.—Bapt. 'the son of Ingledew'(?), one of the many compounds of Ingle, q.v. It is found half-latinized in the Hundred Rolls in the entry:

Henry Angel-Dei, co. Linc., 1273. A.

John Angel-Dei, co. Linc., ibid.

This I take to be but a play upon the word, as is common in such Latin entries. Otherwise it would be equivalent to the German Gottschalk, i.e. God's servant. As a surname it has made a safe and secure position for itself in English directories.

Inglesant, Inglesent.—?Bapt.

'the son of Inglesant,' probably one of the many personal names compounded of Ing and Ingle; cf.

Johanna Ketelsang (1379, P. T. Yorks, p. 237), an obvious compound of Kettle, q.v.

'In the Poll Book for the election of a Knight of the Shire for Co. Leicester,

January, 1775, the names of John Inglesant and Samuel Inglesant, of Sibley, occur as freeholders.'

The following entry suggests a local origin. I met with it after writing the above:

Ingleson; v. Ingle.

Ingleton.—Local, 'of Ingleton,' a chapelry in the parish of Bentham,

W. Rid. Yorks, near the Lancashire border. Literally 'the town of Ingle,' from the personal name of the first settler; v. Ingle.

The surname was to be found in the district in the 17th century.

John Ingleton, of the parish of Warton, 1608; Lancashire Wills at Richmond (1457-1680), p. 163.

Robert Ingleton, of the parish of Warton, 1614; ibid.

I fear the surname is extinct, but I dare not be positive, as I generally find an instance after making such an assertion. It occurs at the close of last century.

1731. Married—John Ingleton and Eliz. Garvis; St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 9.

1798.—William Halliday and Susannah Ingleton; ibid. ii. 182.

Inglett, Ingle.—Bapt. 'the son of Ingel,' from the dim. Ingel-ot; v. Ingle. Judging by the instances below it would seem as if, amid variations of the spelling of the surname, William had been retained in the family as the traditional personal name.

Ingley; v. Inkley. A variant. 1704. Alexander Petty and Susanna Ingley; Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 332. London, 1.

Inglis, English, Ingliss.—Local, 'the English,' i.e. the Englishman, a name originating in the Lowlands. A State document relating to a serious raid across the border in 1541, speaks of the attacking party as gathering 'to the number of fifty-two Inglismen' (TTT. p. lii). Again, reference is made to 'Andro Frostar, Ady Frostar, John Frostar, Inglismen' (ibid. p. liii); v. English.

Inglishby; v. Ingoldby.

Ingman.—Occur, 'the servant of Ingram'; cf. Bartleman, Dickman, Addyman, &c.; v. Matthewman. Had it not been for the instances from the Yorkshire Poll Tax, I should have unhesitatingly put it down as 'the servant of Ing,' q.v. Perhaps that is the truer derivation.

Ingold.—Bapt. 'the son of Ingold.' One of many personal names founded upon the root Ing (v. Yonge, ii. 248); cf. the local Ingoldsby, Ingoldsthorpe, or Ingoldsmels, proving how familiar a name it was among the early settlers. Probably Ingle (q.v.) and Ingall were variants.

1562. Married—John Abowen and Jane Inggould; St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 225.

Ingoldby, Ingoldsby, Inglishby.—Local, 'of Ingoldsby,' a parish in co. Lincoln. Lit. the 'by or dwelling of Ingold,' the first settler; v. Ingold. The same individual is thus referred to on the same page:

Roger de Ingoldeby, co. Linc., 1273. A. (i. 387.)

John Ingot, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 218.

MDb. (co. Chester), 1.

Ingram, Ingraham.—Bapt. 'the son of Ingram' or Ingelram, one of the many compounds of which Ingle or Engle is the prefix.

'Ingelram the first, count of Ponthieu'; Freeman's Norman Conquest, iii. 135.

One of these Ingelrams of Ponthieu married the Conqueror's sister Adelaide. By-and-by Ingeram or Ingram became the recognized form.

Ingulf.—Bapt. 'the son of Ingulf' (Yonge, ii. 248). A secretary of William the Conqueror bore this name.

Inions.—Bapt. 'the son of Eineon,' one of the many variants of the great Welsh personal name Enion or Eynon; v. Benyon. Inions is the genitive form; cf. Jones, Watkins, Williams.

'Eineon (fl. 1093), Welsh prince, and warrior, son of Collwyn, played a great part in the famous legend of the Conquest of Glamorgan by the Normans': Dict. Nat. Bioq. xvii. 167.

The surname is, as might be expected, found chiefly on the Welsh border. But it is not common, Enion, Eynon, &c., being the modern surnominal forms. Onions (q.v.) is an imitative variant of the same name.

1593. Buried—Joane, d. William Ineon, of the plague: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 204.

Inkersole, -soll; v. Ingersoll.

Inkle; v. Inckle.

Inkley, Inckley, Inceley, Hinkley, Hineckley.—Local, 'of Hineckley,' a parish in co. Warwick, but partly in co. Leicester. In surnames it is quite common to find an aspirate lost or added, but especially lost. In its more correct form the surname has ramified strongly in the United States.

1557. Married—Robert Hynckley and Tomasyn Emerye: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 7.

1605. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Michael Hinchley: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 45.

1638.—George, s. George Incely: ibid. p. 140.

1643.—Thomas, s. George Incely: ibid. p. 154.

In my last reference the name returns to its original form:

1790. Married—Thomas Ingepen and Harriet Lockyer: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 52.

London, 1.

Inman.—Occur. 'the inn-man,' a lodging-house keeper. Later on the terms innholder and innkeeper took its place. Inman, however, attained surnominal honours, and thus is amply avenged. M.E. in; 'in, hospiciu': Prompt. Parv. A synonymous surname is Oastler from Hosteler. Inman has existed in Furness, North Lancashire, for centuries, and still flourishes.

Ironside, Ironsides.—? Nick. 'the iron-side,' a sobriquet for some strong, thick-ribbed man. History is familiar with Cromwell's Ironsides. But it must not be forgotten that Durham is a large centre of the haematite industry, and that -side is a common local suffix in that district (v. Akenside). Therefore it might well be that Iron-side simply meant 'at the side of the iron lode,' or 'pit.'

Irving, Irvin, Irvine, Irwin, Urwin, Urwen, Erwin, Ervin.—Local, (1) 'of Irvine,' a parish in Ayrshire; (2) 'of Irving,' a parish in Dumfriesshire. That all these variants come of one or two stocks is incontestable. Mr. Robert Bruce Armstrong in his book, The Debatable Land (p. 185), finds the following variations of this border-name: Irving, Erwing, Erwyn, Irrwin, Irrwing, Irveyn, Irwynn, and Urwen. The last is a well-known form of the surname in Northumberland. This is the only variant without representation in my copy of the London Directory. It is not often that a surname is Isard, Isitt, Issard, Issott, Izard, Izat, Izod, Izzard, Izatson, Isaard, Issitt, Isett.—(1) Bapt. 'theson of Izod,' or 'Ysolt,' or 'Isolda.' This batch of surnames was given up in despair by Mr. Lower. I, myself, in my English Surnames, got astray in ascribing them to Isabel. Their origin is a very simple one, as given above; the fact being that Isolda was a very popular girl's name at the surname period. Ysolt is, of course, one of the names connected with Arthur's Court, coming in the episode of Tristan. It was very popular in Yorkshire and Cornwall, in the latter of which counties I find it a font-name within the last hundred years, in the forms of Isot and Izot. For other variants, v. Ivatt, Ivatts, Ivetts.—Bapt. 'the son of Ivo' or 'Ive,' dim. Ivote, Ivette, or Ivetta (v. Ive). Ivo de Usegate was bailiff of York in 1271. A few years after we find the Church of Askam-Richard, close to the city, given by William de Archis, and Ivetta, his wife, to the Nunnery of Monkton. In 1729 Alicia Iveson was buried in St. Martin's, Micklegate. Thus in the one city we have memorials of the male, female, and hereditary use of this once famous font-name (v. Ive, Ives, Iveson, Iverson.—Bapt. 'the son of Ivo' or 'Ive.'

Miss Yonge has an interesting account of this name (ii. 249-50).

Probably connected with Ives, the saint who gave the title to St. Ives in co. Huntingdon (who, legend says, was a Persian bishop, and set up a hermitage on that spot), and Iva, similarly commemorated at St.

Ives in co. Cornwall. The great Ivo de Taillebois reminds us of the Norman equivalent, St. Ives of Brittany; and St. Ivo de Chartres, imprisoned for his opposition to the adultery of Philip I, gave a natural impetus to the popularity of the name. v. Ivatt.

Ivimey, Ivimy, Ivamy.

Ivermee.—? I cannot suggest any satisfactory derivation. Mr.

Lower writes, 'There was a favourite character in the old Christmas games called Ivy, whose antagonist was Holly: and the frolics of the Holly-boy and the Ivy-girl were maintained in Kent (on St. Valentine's Day) till towards the close of the 18th century (Gent. Mag. 1779). See the Song of the "Holly and Ivy" quoted in Hone's Mysteries, p. 94, where Ivy is made to be of the feminine gender:

"Holy and his merymen, they dawnsyn and they syng;
Ivy and hur maydyns, they wepen and they wryng."

The singular name Ivymey, Ivimey, signifying Ivy-maiden, Mr. Ferguson thinks, may be from this source. This view is not impossible. The surname King has generally so risen (v. King and Kingman); cf. the nick.

Ivor, Ivers, Iversen, Iverson.—Bapt. 'the son of Ivar'; seemingly another form of Ivo or Ive. Still in use in Denmark, and has crossed the waters in patronymic guise as Iversen (v. London Directory). My references are Welsh, and if further proof was needed of the cosmopolitan use of the name, the Irish and Scotch MacIver and MacIvor would supply the deficiency. v. Ive.

Ivery, Ivery.—(1) Local, 'of Ivery.' The family de Ivery were descended from Rodolph, half-brother to Richard the First, Duke of Normandy, who for killing a monstrous boar, while hunting with the Duke, was rewarded with the Castle of Ivery, on the river l'Evre, and from thence entitled Comes de Iberio (Dunkin's Oxfordshire, i. 22). Lower adds to the above, 'John de Ivery obtained the manor of Ambrosden, co. Oxon, in 1077, and Hugh de Ivri occurs as its lord in Domesday Book.' It is believed the name so originated is obsolete.

1391. William Yvory: Cal. of Wills in the Court of Husting (2).

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Ivor,' popularly Ivory; v. Ivor. 'Ireland had a St. Ivor or Ivory, who was considered to have prayed away from Fernegenall the mures majores qui vulgariter Rati vocantur so completely that none ever survived there again; but whether he was named by Dane or Kelt does not appear. At any rate, St. Ivory was deemed good to invoke against rats' (Yonge, ii. 249-50).

Ivory Malet, temp. 1270. DD.

The above instance seems to have anticipated croquet by half a dozen centuries. It reminds me of such combinations as Savage Bear, More Fortune, River Jordan, Christmas Day, or Pine Coffin. Christmas Day appeared in 1884 at a trial in Lancaster (v. my English Surnames, 5th edit. pp. 508-9).

(3) Bapt. 'the son of Every' (v. Everson). In some cases the familiar surname Every has assumed the imitative form of Ivory (cf. Ivens for Evans). The same individual is referred to as—

Lower has Izatson in his Patr. Brit. p. 170. I have not yet met with an instance. He suggests that it is a corruption of Isaacson. I doubt not it must be placed here.

Izen, Izon; v. Ison.

J

Jack, Jackes, Jacks, Jacke.—Bapt. 'the son of John,' from nick. Jack; v. Jakes. It seems probable that for a short period after Jack was becoming the nick. for John, robbing James of the distinction, Jakes with an s answered for Jacques or Jacobus, and Jake or Jack without an s for John.

Jackett, Jacquette. — Bapt. 'the son of Jack,' from dim. Jacket; cf. O.F. Jaquette, a girl's name. The dictionary 'jacket' has probably a similar origin, being the dim. of O.F. jaque, a jack or coat of mail, which Ducange assigns to the Jacquerie, or revolt of the peasantry nicknamed Jacques Bonhomme, A.D. 1358; v. Skeat.

James, Jameson, Jamieson, Jamison, Jamson.—Bapt. 'the son of James.' The purely English Jamison and its variants are almost entirely confined to North England, and indeed the great majority are of Lowland Scottish descent. On the other hand, James as a surname is as often South English as North, which accounts for the multitude of its modern representatives. It is particularly strong in the West country.

Jayne(s); v. Jane.

Jaycocks, -cox; v. Jeacock.

Jeacock, Jeacocks, Jacox, Jecock, Jaycocks, Jaycox.—Bapt. 'the son of John,' from the nick. Jack and suffix -cock. Jack-cock was soon abbreviated to Jacock, and this became corrupted into Jeacock. The patronymic Jacocks, of course, became Jacox; cf. Wilcock and Wilcox, and v. Cocks. Jancock is found early:

1397. Richard Jancock: Cal. of Wills in Court of Husting (2).
1669. Married—Edward Endell and Margaret Jecockes: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 158.
1700.—Caleb Jacock and Eliz. Thornhill: ibid. p. 222.

Jeakins, Jeakes.—Bapt. 'the son of John,' from the nick. Jack, and dim. Jack-kin. In the same way we derive Jeacock (q.v.) from Jack-cock; cf. Wilcock and Wilkin. Just as Dawkins became corrupted to Dawkes, and Perkins to Perkes, and Wilkins to Wilkes, so Jeakins became corrupted to Jeakes.

1772. Married—John Jakins and Mary Pettis: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 223.
1806.—Robert Jeakins and Eliz. Winsall: ibid. ii. 352.
London, 3, 1.

Jealous.—? —. Probably nothing to do with the quality jealous, but an imitative corruption of some baptismal name.

1603. Bapt.—George, s. William Jellis: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 41.
1783. Married—Henry Gillies and Mary Downing: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 344.
MDB. (co. Camb.), 2; (co. Lincoln), 4.

Jean(s, Jeanes; v. Jeens.

Jeavons.—Bapt.; v. Jevon.

Jebb, Jebson.—Bapt. 'the son of Geoffrey,' from nick. Gepp or Jepp; v. Jephson = Jepps and Jephson. A lazy pronunciation; cf. Slagg and Slack, &c.

1642. Buried—Sarath Jebson, Mr. Pecke his servant: St. Mary Aldermary, p. 172.

Jeens, Jeans, Jean, Jeanes, Jeynes, Jeynson, Jeannes.—Bapt. 'the son of John.' To the influence of the O.F. dim. Jenin we owe our English Jennings (q.v.). To the influence of Jean we owe the variants of Jones here given; v. Jane and Jones.

Jeeves, Jevs.—Bapt. 'the son of Geoffrey,' from nick. Jeff, patronymic Jeffs. The Yorkshire Poll Tax contains endless references to Jeff, or Geff, or Gep; v. Gipp and Jeffs and Jephson. No wonder therefore that corrupted forms have come down to us; v. Geeves, where the Yorkshire instances will be found clearly explained.

Jeffery, Jeffray, Jefferey, Jefferies, Jefferis, Jefferiss, Jefferys, Jeffree, Jeffrey, Jeffreys, Jeffries, Jeffryes, Jeffrie, Jeffry.—Bapt. 'the son of Geoffrey,' q.v. The various forms cited and the numbers of their representatives furnish some sort of idea of the enormous popularity of this now old-fashioned font-name in the 13th and 14th centuries. To give more than one or two modern references would be superfluous.

Jekyll, Jeckell, Jeckyll, Jeckyl, Jeckills, Jickles, Jeckel.—Bapt. 'the son of Jukel' or 'Gikel.' Although the personal name soon died out, the surname formed from it struggled into existence and still lives. Jeckills is the genitive form (as in Williams, Jones, &c.), and of this Jickles is a manifest variant.

Crockford, 3, 0; London, 0, 1; Philadelphia, 5, 0.

Jelley, Jelly.—(1) Bapt. A corruption of Jenney, q.v. In the same way Jennison became Jellison, q.v. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Juliana,' from the nick. Jill ('Jack and Jill') turned into the pet Jilly or Jelly; cf. Jelyan for Gillian:

1570. Married—Myles Jelyan and Agnes Smythe: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 4.

Or Jelson for Gilson or Jilson:

Jellicoe, Jellico, Jellicorse.—

? Nick. The old nickname Gentilcors naturally arises to one's mind. This would popularly become Jellicour or Jellicorse. In the United States this name has assumed the form of Jericho, q.v. It will be seen that Jellicorse still exists, and Jellicour existed so late as the 17th century.

Jellison, Jellerson. — (1) Bapt.; v. Jennison; cf. bannister for baluster. Although now only found, I believe, in America, it was an English corruption, finding its way, no doubt, with the Pilgrim Fathers. (2) Bapt. A variant of Jillson, q.v.

1592. Richard Gelyson and Mary Hope: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 203.

1593. Bapt.—Luce, d. William Jellyson, or Gennysson: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 27.

Jennison, Jenney, Jenny.—Bapt. 'the son of John,' from O.F. Jean, dim. Jenin ; v. Jennings. The feminine Jenny was probably not in use at this time. It is almost certain that it was a masculine form at first and a modification of Jenin, just as Colly was of Colin.

Jerman, Jermin ; v. Jarman.

Jermy, Jermey.—Bapt. 'the son of Jermin.' At first sight this name would seem to be Jeremy, q.v., but Blomefield in his History of Norfolk, to which county the Jermys belong, says positively that Jermin is the true parent ; v. Jarman. This is likely to be true, as Jermyn has been for centuries a Norfolk patronymic.

Jermye Gooch, 1652, co. Norf. : ibid. p. 321.

Perhaps the explanation is that surnames were then beginning to be fashionable as fontal names, and Jermey being thus used was miswritten or confused with Jeremy.

Jermyn ; v. Jarman.

Jerningham, Jernegan, Jenningham.—Bapt. 'the son of Gernegan.' The second n is excrement ; cf. Pottinger and Messenger for Potager and Messenger. In some documents bearing the seal of Queen Elizabeth (1572), concerning the town of Yarmouth, Sir Henry Jerningham, knight, is set down as 'Sir Henry Jernegam' not less than three times ; v. FF. xi. 288-91. Blomefield says, 'That Jernegan was anciently a Christian name is very true, as numerous records prove. In 1195, there was a fine levied of lands in Edricheston, in Warwickshire, between Reginald de Claverdon and Gernagan his brother, and about this time it was a common name in France, as we find from Lobineau, in his History of Britain (i. 105), where Jernegon de Pontchasteau and some others of the name are mentioned' (FF. ii. 411).

Jerome, Jerram, Jerrems.

Jarrom.—Bapt. 'the son of Jerome.' I do not find any early English instances. It must have been a rare name in this country. Miss Yonge writes, 'The spear raven, Gerramn, is the old English Jerram that has become lost in Jerome' (Hist. Christian Names, ii. 328). I cannot discover any trace of an old English name Jerram as distinct from Jerome. Jerrems is the genitive form, as in Jones, Williams, &c.

Jessop, Jessup, Jessopp, Jessupp.—Bapt. 'the son of Joseph'; O.E. Josep. Any doubt on the subject is settled by the subjoined references from the York Poll Tax:

Jewkes; v. Jukes.

Jewsbury.—(1) Local, 'at the jewsbury,' i.e. the district or part of a town set apart for the residence of Jews; v. Jury. The surname is North English, and not found in the London Directory. The York Pageant (1417) was arranged to play at certain points of the city, amongst others 'at the end of Jubir-gate' (query Jewbury-gate): York Mystery Plays, p. xxxiii, ed. Toulmin Smith. (2) Local, 'of Dewsbury,' a town in W. Rid. Yorks. Probably a corruption, as suggested by Mr. Lower. This view is strengthened by the fact that the surname seems confined to Lancashire and Yorkshire.

MDB. (West Rid. Yorks), 1; Manchester, 3.

Jewson, Juson.—Nick. 'the Jew's son' (?). Nevertheless, the instance below seems to refute this statement since Peter would not be used as a personal name by a strict Jew. With the variant Jiggins, Jeggins, Jeggs, Jegen.—Bapt. 'the son of Jegg,' whence the dim. Jeggon. Jeggins or Jeggins is the genitive, as in Jennings, Jones, Williams, &c. There can be little doubt that the original name was Jackson (i.e. little Jack), which became Jaggin or Jegginn. Jack is found as Jagg in early rolls, and is so styled by the author of Piers Plowman. The surname Jeggins seems to have arisen in co. Essex, where Jeggins, Jeggs, and Jaggs are still to be met with.

In 1590 John Jeggon, son of Robert Jeggon, of Coggeshall, co. Essex, was appointed Warden of Bennet College (now Corpus Christi), Cambridge. He was a strict disciplinarian. He fined the undergraduates for some offence and with the mulct whitened the college hall.—On one of the screens a young fellow wrote:—

'Doctor John Jeggon, of Bennet College, Master, Broke the Scholars' heads, and gave the Hall plaister.'

The Doctor, seeing it as he passed by, subscribed extempore:

I'd commend him for his wit, but whip him for his knavery': FF. iii. 562.

Jigger.—Occup. 'the jigger,' a player on the gige or gigue, a musical instrument; hence jig, a dance. Italian giga, a fiddle; cf. Crowder or Crowther, and Fiddler. This surname lasted till the 16th century. I suspect it is now extinct.

Jinkins, Jinks.—Bapt. 'the son of John,' from dim. Jenkin, whence Jinkin, the patronymic of which was Jinkins. This passed through the usual stages of modifications into Jinks, and was turned into Ginx in the story of 'Ginx's Baby,' which created a certain sensation a few years ago; cf. Dawks, Wilks, Perks, Tonks, &c., from Dawkins, Wilkins, Perkins, Tonkins, &c.; cf. Jinkson for Jenkinson in the following:

Jobling.—Bapt. 'the son of Job,' from dim. Jobelin; cf. Hewling; v. Joplin and Jopling. Jobelin seems to suggest the origin of Jobelin, a stupid man. 'Jobelin, a sot, a fool' (Cole's Eng. Dict., 1684). 'Joblin, a stupid boy. Somerset' (Halliwell). 'As patient as Job' is even now not used complimentarily. Job's patience has even seemed to imply want of energy, and the term would easily become a nickname for lethargy, but was not easily distinguished from sheer stupidity; v. Joppe, Joppus, and Joppa, Prompt. Parv., where Joppe may be Job. Jobling may therefore belong to the nickname class without affecting the origin given above.

Joiner, Joyner.—Occup. 'the joiner,' rare. Probably joiner as an occupational term came into use somewhat later than carpenter. The surname seems barely to have maintained an existence, while Carpenter and Wright are represented by thousands.

Joll; see Jull.

Jolland, Golland, Galland, Jollands, Jollans, Jalland.—Bapt. 'the son of Jollan,' possibly, as stated by Camden, a corruption of Julian. The d in Jolland is excrement; cf. riband, Simmond, and Hammond, for ribbon, Simon, and Hamon. The front-name is almost entirely found in co. Lincoln, where also the surname seems to have originated. It is interesting to notice that Lincolnshire is still the chief habitat of all the various forms. With the initial G, cf. Gill and Jill, Garrett and Jarratt, Gosling and Joscelyn. The final s in Jollands and Jollans is the patronymic, as in Williams, Jennings, &c.

Jolly, Jolley, Joly, Jollie. — Nick. 'the jolly,' merry, gay, festive; v. Jolliff. Prof. Skeat connects it with Yule; Icel. jöl. The following entries referring to the same individual are interesting:

p. 265.
Agnes, serviens Joly Johan, 1379: ibid.
p. 226.

Hence the double forms Little and Little-john in our directories. In the latter case the font-name becomes permanently incorporated with the nickname. Jolly-john might as easily have been perpetuated. Note, however, Y and J in the instance given; v. Joy for similar instance.

Jones, Joneson. — Bapt. 'the son of John (?)', or 'Johan', or 'Jone,' as at first written and pronounced, both masculine and feminine. In the 13th and 14th centuries Johan stood for both Johannes and Johanna. This being awkward, the masculine took the form of John (Jon), the feminine of Joan (Jone). But it is quite clear from evidence that for a time the sound Jone represented both. In the Poll Tax, 1379, co. Yorks (p. 43), we find for instance:

Jordan, Jordanson, Jordison, Jordeson, Jorden, Jordon. — Bapt. 'the son of Jordan.' This great personal name, that has made such a strong impression on English and West European nomenclature, received its impetus, like Ellis (Elias), John, and Baptist, from the Crusades. Flasks of Jordan water, we know, were brought home to be used for fontal purposes. John the Baptist was the second Elias, and the baptizer of Jesus Christ. Naturally Jordan was added to the list, and became popular throughout Western Europe. Only a trained student of nomenclature can know what a favourite it became in England. Every register has its muster of instances. Judd was the nick. (whence Judd, Judde, and Judson, q.v.), and Judkin the dim. after the prevailing fashion that gave us Watkin, or Wilkin, or Simpkin, or Tompkin (whence Judkins toned down to Juckins, Juggins, Jukes, and Jukes, q.v.). Dean Stanley says, 'The name of the river has in Italy and Spain, by a natural association, been turned into a common Christian name for children at the hour of baptism, which served to connect them with it' (Sinai and Palestine, p. 333). The late dean did not seem aware that the practice was equally common in England.

Joule, Joul, Jowle, Joules. — Bapt. 'the son of Joel.' This was popularly styled Jowel. In course of time this became a monosyllable, and is now commonly found in Derbyshire as Joule or Jowle. The patronymic or genitive form is Joules; cf. Jones, Williams, Simpkins, &c. For instances of Jowel, v. Jewell.

Jowett, Jowitt.—Bapt. 'the son of Juliet.' A New England corruption. There can be, I suspect, no controversy on the origin of these names. Julian or Gillian early took to itself a dim. Juliet or Gilot. The more correct Juliet would, of necessity, almost become Juwet in Yorkshire and the north of England generally; v. Jewett. Of course this modification was not wholly northern.

Joyce, Joycey, Joysey, Jowsey.—Bapt. 'the son of Josse' or 'Goce.' Cognate in origin with joy and joyous; Latin gaudere. Rendered popular by St. Josse the hermit, who refused the sovereignty of Brittany (v. Yonge, i.

396). Nearly forgotten as it is, this name was parent of the dim. Jocelyn, and thus secured immortality through its offspring. From the first there was in England a choice of initials, G or J. If G, then the name was pronounced hard as in gospel, if J, soft as in gentile. Thus it is that we have Gosling and Joscelyn in our directories, while both are the same name. The early entries of Josse or Goce are numerous, the diminutives at first being rare. Such are some of the registrations:

Goce Fitz-peter, sheriff of London, 1211: WWW. pp. 187-90.
Goce le Pesur, sheriff, 1218: ibid.
Goce le Juvene, sheriff, 1220: ibid.

Goceus Gotheil, Hen. III-Edw. I. K.
Robert fil. Jocei, 20 Edw. I. R.
1618. William Hercules and Jane Jowsy: Marriage Lic. (Westminster), p. 24.

The name became distinctly popular, and many diminutives arose, Josselin and Gocelin being the chief. For instances, v. Goslin and Joslin. Gosset and Goslett (q.v.) added themselves to the list. The parent form Josse became Jocey, as already seen, and through French influence (cf. re-joice and joy) Joyce and Joycey. This last is common in Durham and the Newcastle district; v. Newcastle Directory.

John Moorhead, clerk, against William Joysey in a ple of trespass, 1614: ibid. p. 243.

It needs only to add that Joyce became a favourite girl's name, though some of the early instances may be masculine.

Joyce Tibetot, ibid.
Joyce Frankline, co. York. W. g.
1563. Buried—Joyce, wife of Thomas Armstrong: St. Dionis Backchurch (London), p. 187.

I find that the name Joyce occurs once as a nickname, equivalent to joyous:

Richard le Joyce. J.
London, 30, 1, 4, 0; Sunderland (Jowsey), 1; Philadelphia, 76, 0, 10, 0.

Joynner.—Occur.; v. Joiner.

Joynson, Joynes.—Bapt. 'the son of John'; v. Johns. This form has existed in Cheshire for several centuries. It was a compromise between Johnson and Joneson; v. Jones. The latter is found in Cheshire at an early period:

'William le Crouther, William le Baron, Robert de Bookynton, Henry Joneson of Werford,' &c.: Hist. East Ches. i. 424.

Robert Joynson, of Eaton, co. Ches., 1582: Wills at Chester (1545-1620), p. 111.

1619. Arthur Joynson, of Waverton: Hist. East Ches. ii. 146.

Of course Welsh influence had much to do with these Cheshire variants of Johnson.

Jubb, Jupp, Juppe.—Bapt. 'the son of Job.' Jubb was, generally speaking, the North-English, Jupp or Joppe the South-English form. This probably explains jubbe, a drinking vessel, i.e. a Job's comforter.

'With bred and chese, and good ale in a jubbe.' Chaucer, C. T. 3628.

Jack and Jug (Joan) were both similarly employed; jug still exists. v. Jupp.

Juckins, Jukinson. — (1) Bapt. 'the son of Jordan,' from the nick. Judd, and dim. Judkin. The patronymic Juckins was modified into Juckins; v. Jukes and Juggins.

I have only seen one instance of Jukinson.

1641. Married—Ralf Jukinson and An Lane: Canterbury Cathedral.

(2) Bapt. Possibly a Flemish name, from a nick. Jo (Joseph?), and dim. Jokin.

William Jokin, co. Suff., 1273. A.
John Jowkin, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 295.

In spite of these two entries I cannot but think that the extremely popular font-name Jordan with its nick. Judd is the parent. Juckins was bound to become Juckins and Jukinson or Juckinson.

Judd, Judde, Jude.—Bapt. 'the son of Jordan,' from nick. Jud, but possibly an early form of Jude. The former is much more probable as Jordan (q.v.) was one of the favourite names of the surname era. Jurdi occurs as a single name (A. ii. 198), also Jurdy (A. ii. 148), which are obviously nicknames of Jordan. Henry Jurde and Bartholomew Jurde occur in the same register. These would readily become popularized into Juddy. In the account of Wat Tyler's insurrection Gower says:

'Hudde ferit, quem Judde terit, dum Tibbe juvatur.'

Judge.—? Offic. 'the judge'; cf. Justice. So far I have come across no early instances, and suspect it is generally Judds corrupted (i.e. the son of Jordan); v. Judd and Juckins. In this case Judge would be imitative.

Jugson; v. Juxon.

Jukes, Jewks, Juckes, Jewkes.—Bapt. 'the son of Jordan,' from nick. Judd, and dim. Jud-kin. With a patronymic s (as in Williams) this became Judkins, by-and-by corrupted into Juckiss, Juckiss, and finally Jukes, &c.; cf. Julian, Julien, Julian, Julian.—Bapt. 'the son of Juliana,' from the martyr of that name, beheaded at Nicomedia under Galerius (Yonge, i. 320). Popular at an early period, both in the Low Countries and in Normandy. It attained such favour in England that Jack and Jill took the place of Godric and Godgiva as representatives of the sexes. The ordinary form was Julian and Gillian, in which latter shape it reached the 16th century.

1573. Married—John Carrington and Gillyan Lovelake: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 7.

1586. Bapt.—Gillian, d. Thomas Jones, grocer: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 30.

1774. Married—James Julian and Eliz. Yandley: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 243.
1793. — Jean Jullien and Edith Hunt: ibid. ii. 101.

The nick. of Julian, as will have been understood above, was Jill or Gill.

'I am careless to see thee carelesse, Jylle.
I am woful to see thee wytlesse, Wyll.'
Heywood's Epigrams.

'Sir, for Jak nor for Gille
Wille I turne my face.'
Towneley Mysteries, Noah.

Richard fil. Gille, co. Camb., 1273. A. Gille Hull, co. Camb., ibid.

This nick. gave birth to Gill and Gillson, q.v. The dim. was Juliet, a name later on to be made familiar for ever. This was ordinarily corrupted to or modified into Juet, Jewett, or Jowett, q.v.

William fil. Juet, co. Camb., 1273. A. Jowet Barton, co. York. W. 11.

Hence our various Jewitts, Jewetts, Jowetts, and Jowitts, also our Jewitsons, Jowetsons, Jewisons, and Jewsons.

Christopher Jewitson. Z.

Besides Juliet there was the corresponding form Gillot or Gillet. In one of the old Metrical Sermons it is said:

'Robin will Gilot
Leden to the nale,
And sitten there togedres,
And tellen their tale.'
Gillot Carel. (BB.)

But our Gilletts and Gilloths must as a rule be referred to William; v. Gillott. From Juliet or Gilot we got 'jilt.' Constant association with Jack made it a cant term for an inconstant girl:

'All shall be well, Jack shall have Gill;
Nay, nay, Gill is wedded to Will.'

Shakespeare has a similar slighting allusion, flirt-gill (Romeo, ii. 4); flirt-gillian (Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances, iii. 1). 'A jillet brak his heart at last': Burns, On a Scotch Bard. Another instance of the disrepute of Julian lies in the local 'Julian Bowers' or 'Gelyan Bowers,' a name for the old-fashioned mazes or labyrinths formed by hedges. To find Jillian seated laughing in the centre was the gallant's difficulty. Correspondents in N. and Q. (1855, pp. 65, 132, 193) ascribed them to the Roman period and the Emperor Julian or Julius, son of Aeneas, and quote Virgil, Aen. v. 1. A Julian Bower is noticed in Stukeley's Itinerarium Curiosum, p. 91. Several of the above observations will be found elsewhere, but I thought it better, with a fontal name that has made such a deep impression on our nomenclature, to give a somewhat complete statement.

Keatch, Keech, Keach, Ketch, Keitch, Kedge.—Nick. 'Kedge,' brisk, active. It occurs as Kygge or Kydge=jocundus, in Prompt. Parv. p. 274. Hence we need not be surprised to find the home of the surname to be in co. Norfolk and the neighbouring shires. 'Kedge,' brisk, budge, hale, lively. Suff.: Ray and Moor (v. Wray's note on Kygge in Prompt. Parv.).

Kedge, Keech; v. Keatch.

Keedwell, Kidwell.—? Bapt.

'the son of Kedwell'; seemingly a Welsh personal name, possibly an abbreviation of Cadwallador, or Cadwallon (v. Yonge, ii. 94). There is a parish of Kidwelly in the dioc. of St. David's.

1589. Roger Kidwall: St. Mary Aldermary, p. 8.

1598. Bapt.—Kedwallader, son of Kedwell Rogers: ibid. p. 65.

1747. Married—John Saxon and Catherine Kidwell: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 39. London, 1, 1; MDB. (co. Glouc.), 4, 0; (co. Somerset), 2, 0; (co. Monmouth), 1, 1; Philadelphia, 0, 2.

London, 3, 1, 1; Philadelphia, 30, 0, 2.

Keel, Keele; v. Keal.

Keeler, Keelar.—Occup. 'the keeler,' a bargeman, one who navigated a keel. Brockett has quotations in 1378 and 1440 (p. 244). The surname is found on the East coast, just where one would expect it.

1750. Married—Thomas Keeler and Jane Plaw: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 183. 1799. — Alexander Keeler and Jean Duncan: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 208.

London, 9; Philadelphia, 10.

Kench; v. Kinch.

Kendal, Kendall, Kendell, Kendle, Kendel.—Local, 'of Kendal,' co. Westm. The manufacture of 'Kendal green' made this town early famous, and of necessity caused the surname to be common. The result is that it is familiar to every directory in the English-speaking world. The river Kent, I need not say, still flows through the dale. The surname is frequently met with in all the adjacent villages and towns of the Furness district of North Lancashire.

Kendrick, Kenrick, Kenrack, Kenwright, Kenwrick.—Bapt. 'the son of Kenwrec.' Domesday Kenricus and Kenric. It is the still earlier Cynric, one of which name defeated the Welsh at Salisbury (Freeman, N.C. i. 319). With Kenwright (which seems to imply an occupation; cf. Cartwright, Arkwright), cf. Allwright for Aldrich.

Keniston, Kenniston, Kenison, Kennerson.—Variants of Kynaston, q.v. The American forms of Kennison and Kennerson seem to suggest a baptismal derivation. But such is not the case. There are dozens of parallel instances in this dictionary. The suffix -ston or -stone is frequently corrupted to -son. The instances below show how the ball of corruption was set rolling; cf. Kelson for Kelston.

Kerbey, Kerby; v. Kirkby.

Kerchiefwasher.—Occup. 'a washer of kerchiefs'; M.E. covenchef, a cloth used for a head covering. As a favourite decoration of the ladies of the period it would require a special 'stiffener.' Although it could not live it is a surname of some antiquarian interest as descriptive of the times.

Isabella Kierchiefwassher, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 237.

Kerford, Kerfoot, Kerfut.—Local, 'of Kerford.' I cannot identify the spot, and have only one early instance. Kerfoot is, of course, a corruption. Lancashire and Yorkshire are manifestly the district within which the place must be found.

Kerridge, Kerrich.—Local, 'of Kerridge,' an elevated locality in the parish of Prestbury, co. Cheshire.

Alfred Gatley, the sculptor, was born at Kerridge in 1816. Lower, under Courage, has 'Curragh, a manor in the parish of Cheveley, co. Bucks.'

The latter place seems to be the chief parent of the name.

Kerrison.—Local, 'of Kerdeston,' a parish in co. Norfolk, near Reepham. There is no escape, so far as I can see, from this conclusion.

Otherwise, one of the earliest and commonest of Norfolk names has left no descendant. On the other hand, where else has the great Norfolk name of Kerrison sprung? It is not a baptismal surname. Finally, Kerdeston would readily become Keriston, and then Kerrison. Personally I have not a doubt about this derivation; cf.

Kelson for Kelston.

will repeat Kerdeston six times over to himself he will see how easily the corruption would arise.

Kershaw, Kershow.—Local, 'of Kirkshaw,' in the parish of Rochdale, co. Lanc. For the loss of k, cf. Kirby for Kirkby. 'Lands in Kirkshaw, Little Wardle . . . and Spotland' (Lanc. and Cheshire Records, pt. ii. p. 330). The surname that has sprung therefrom has ramified in an extraordinary manner, and is known in all English-speaking countries.

Edward Kershaw, of Townhouse, 1617: ibid.

From this period the surname is invariably found as Kershaw. The meaning, of course, is the shaw or wood by the church. I find two instances of the earlier form in the first two following entries:

Agnes Kirkeschagh, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 189.

1630. Bapt.—Thomas Kirkshawe: Reg. Prestbury, co. Ches., p. 273.

Richard Ketering, co. Northampt., 20 Edw. I. R.

1382. Roger Ketering, rector of Burnham Ulp, co. Norf.: FF. vii. 32.

It is interesting to notice how frequently a surname that seems to have died out in England is found across the Atlantic.

Philadelphia, 3, 1.

Ketteringham, Kitteringham.—Local, 'of Ketteringham,' a parish in co. Norfolk.

Agnes de Keteringham, co. Norf., 1273. A.

Kettle, Kettell, Kettelle.—Bapt. 'the son of Kettle.' Ketel, Ketil, Cytel, or Chetel, the sacrificial cauldron of northern mythology. A large number of surnames are founded on Kettle and its compounds; v. Chettle, Oskettle, Arkettle, Grimkettle, Steinkettle, Wulfkettle; also their abbreviations, such as Kell and Chell, Oskell, Arkell, Thurkle, &c.

Ketil, son of Tostig: Freeman, Norm. Cong. iii. 375.

The father of William of Lancaster, baron of Kendal, was Gilbert, the son of Ketel, the son of Eldred, the son of Ivo de Taillebois (of Domesday): West's Ant. of Furness, p. 28.

'Alan, son of Ketell, gave one-half of Kinemund.' Revenues of the Priory of Conshead: ibid. p. 193.

London, 4 ; West Rid. Court Dir., 11 ; Boston (U.S.), 1 ; New York, 1.

Kettlewood.—Local, 'of Kettlewood' (i.e. the wood of Kettle (q.v.), the original proprietor), some small spot in E. Rid. Yorks. One member of the family of Kettlewood seems to have reached London more than three centuries ago.

1551-2. Married—Thomas Francke and Elyn Ketellwoode : St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 3.

1586. John Kettlewood, of London, grocer, and Eliz. Penny : Marriage Lic. (London), i. 156.

MDb. (East Rid. Yorks), 3.

Kettley, Kitley.—Local, 'of Ketley,' a chapelry in the parish of Wellington, co. Salop.

1561. Married—Richard Wilch'm and Eliz. Kitly : St. Thomas the Apostle (London), p. 3.

1573. Henry Roe and Susanna Ketley : Marriage Lic. (London), i. 58.

Possibly the above is a variant of Keighley, q.v.

1742. Bapt. — William, s. Ambrose Kitley : St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 261.

1781. Married—George Thornton and Amey Ketly : St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 321. London, 1, 1.

Ketton, Keeton, Kitton.—Local, 'of Ketton,' (1) a township in the parish of Lamplugh, co. Cumberland; (2) a parish in co. Rutland, near Stamford.

Johannes de Keton, 1379 : P. T. Yorks. p. 63.

Henry de Ketton, 1379 : ibid. p. 237.

1506. Thomas Keton, rector of Langale and Kirksted, co. Norf. : FF. x. 165. 1805. Married—Thomas Keeton and Ann Fuller : St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 331. Lanc. Court Dir., 2, 0, 0 ; MDb. (co. Norfolk), 2, 0, 1 ; London, 0, 1, 0.

Kevan, Kevin.—Bapt. 'the son of Kevin' (Yonge, ii. 108), evidently a Welsh name.

Kavan ap Howell, 20 Edw. I. R. London, 2, 0 ; Philadelphia, 0, 3.

Kew.—(1) Occup. 'the cook,' Nicholas le Keu, co. Notts, 1273. A. Walter le Keu, co. Oxf., ibid.

The same individual is thus described :

William le Keu, 1301. M.

William Cocus, 1302. M.

William le Keu, or Cocus, 1306. M.

(2) Local, 'of Kew,' the well-known parish in the dioc. of Rochester.

1688. Thomas Palfrey and Mary Kew : Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 79.

1809. Married—John Kew and Flora Sharman : St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 416. London, 4.

Kewell, Kevell.—Local, 'of Kewell,' seemingly some small spot in co. Somerset with the local suffix -well.

John Kewel, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

This name seems sometimes to have been registered Kevell.

William de Kiwell, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III. : Kirby's Quest, p. 159.

1598. George Rewitt, co. Warwick : Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 227.

In a footnote the editor says that this last name is indistinct. It might be Rewill, or Revell, or Kevel.

1620. Bapt.—Janie, d. Henry Kevill : St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 87.

1751. Married—William Garrett and Eliz. Kevell : St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 193.

London, 2, 0 ; Philadelphia, 0, 1.

Kewley, Cully.—Local, 'of Quilli,' near Falaise, Normandy.

Hughe de Cully, 1313. M.

Hugo de Cully, 1314. M.

Roger de Cully, 1315. M.

Roger de Kuly, 1318. M.

Roger de Kuyly, 1322. M.

The Isle of Man Kewleys are said to be a mere variant of Kelly, the great Manx patronymic. It is a question I am not able to decide.

1777. Married—William Kewley and Joyce Verty : St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 274. Crockford, 9, 0 ; London, 0, 2 ; Philadelphia, 0, 8.

Keymer, Keymar.—Local, 'of Keymer,' a parish in the dioc. of Chichester, co. Sussex.

1601. Richard Kemer, co. Kent : Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 247.

Richard Kemeyre, 1604 : St. Dionis Backchurch, London, p. 15.

1713. Married—Samuel Keymer and Sarah Beer : St. Mary Aldermay, p. 42.

1793. Married—Francis Keymer and Anne Gilman : St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 93. London, 4, 0 ; New York, 1, 1.

Keyser, Keyzor, Kezar, Kezor.—Nick. ; v. Kaiser.

Keyworth.—Local, 'of Keyworth,' a parish in co. Notts, seven miles from Nottingham.

1500. Buried—Tobie Keworth, servant to Mr. John Hodgkins : St. Mary Aldermay, p. 145.

1786. Married—George Cheshire and Catherine Keyworth : St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 386.

MDb. (co. Notts), 10 ; London, 4 ; New York, 2.

Kibble, Keable, Kebbel, Kebbell, Kebble, Keeble, Kible, Kibel.—Bapt. 'the son of Kibble,' i.e. Cubold. A strong confirmation of the view that Kibbel was an old personal name is the existence of such local names as Kibblethwaite, Kibbleworth, Kibblestone, Cobbledick, q.v. The absence of prefixes in the instances below is additional evidence. I doubt not it is the Domesday Cubold, and therefore a mere variant of Cobbold, q.v.

Thomas Kibel, co. Linc., ibid.

Reginald Kibel, co. Linc., ibid.

1525. George Keybyll and Katharine Terrell : Marriage Lic. (London), i. 5.

1686. Bapt.—John, s. John Keeble : St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 320.

1607. Thomas Keble, co. Suff., and Mary Tirrell : Marriage Lic. (Westminster), p. 15.

The variants of this surname have simply run riot in our registers, especially in modern times. I append a few from one record :

1804. Married—Thomas Keable and Millicent Shepherd : St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 303.

1806. Married—John Kibble and Ann Mary Lockley: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 346.
— Henry Strong and Eliz. Kibble: ibid. p. 341.

1807. — Richard Keeble and Mary Whiting: ibid. p. 366.

1809. — John Keebell and Sarah Parsons: ibid. p. 414.

London, 5, 3, 1, 3, 10, 0, 0; Crockford (Kebble), 3; New York (Kibel), 2; Boston (U.S.), Kibble, 5.

Kibblewhite.—Local, 'of Kibblethwaite'; cf. Applewhite for Applethwaite. The prefix represents the personal name of the settler. The meaning is, 'the thwaite (clearing) of Kibble'; v. Kibble and Thwaite. I cannot find the spot.

1575. Michael Kiblewhite, of London: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 68.

1560. Bapt.—Michael, s. John Kiblewhite: St. Mary Aldermary (London), p. 53.

1597. Married—Roger Gwine and Joane Kibelwhite: ibid. p. 6.

1678. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Edward Kiblewhite: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 16.

1684. — Ann, d. Edward Kiblewhite: ibid. p. 18.

1805. Married—Abraham Boxall and Sarah Kibblewhite: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 322.

London, 2.

Kibby, Kibbee, Kibbe.—Local, 'of Kirkby,' a variant of Kirby; v. Kirkby. With Kibbee, cf. Applebee for Appleby.

Birmingham, 7, 0, 0; Boston (U.S.), 0, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 5, 0, 2.

Kidd.—Nick. 'the kid,' a man of a frisky disposition; cf. Doe, Roe, Buck, Roebuck, &c.

Reginald Kyd, co. Oxf., 1273. A.
Ricardus Kyd, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 226.

Thomas Kydde, 1379: ibid. p. 222.

Willelmus Kydde, 1379: ibid. p. 209.

1611. Anthony Kydde and Julian Percy: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 4.

1631-2. Archibald Kyd and Sara Butler: ibid. p. 204.

1799. Married—William Kidd and Christian Willson: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 202.

London, 20; Philadelphia, 33.

Kidder.—Occup. 'the kidder,' i.e. a huckster. 'Kiddier, a huckster. East' (Halliwell). An Act of Edward VI speaks of 'the buying of anye corne, fyshe, butter, or cheese by any such Badger, Lader, Kyddier, or Carrier as shal be assigned and allowed to that office'

(5 and 6 Edw. VI, c. 14). A confirmation of this Act by Elizabeth alters Kyddier to Kydder. The name is frequently found in the Poll Tax, 1379, W. Rid. Yorks, several instances being given below.

William le Kydere, 25 Edw. I: BBB. p. 542.

Johannes Kyder, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 18.

Johannes Kydder, 1379: ibid. p. 58.

1790. Married—John Kidder and Phoebe Ross: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 40.

London, 1; Philadelphia, 1; Boston (U.S.), 34.

Kiddle, Kiddall, Kidall, Kiddell.—(1) Local, 'of Kiddal,' a hamlet in the parish of Barwick-in-Elmet, seven miles from Leeds, (2) ? Bapt. 'the son of Kedwall'; v. Keedwell. If this be correct it would explain the large number of Kiddles in cos. Gloucester and Somerset, as Kidwell would readily become Kiddle.

Thomas de Kidale, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 227.

Beatrix de Kydhall, 1379: ibid. p. 224.

Walterus de Kydhall, 1379: ibid.

1606. John Sedgewicke and Petronella Kiddall: Marriage Lic. (Westminster), p. 15.

1718. Married—Thomas Kiddle and Mary Maidman: Reg. Stourton, co. Wilts.

1802. — Jonathan Lock and Susanna Kiddell: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 264.

London, 3, 0, 0, 1; MDB. (co. Somerset), 18, 0, 0, 0; (co. Norfolk), 5, 0, 2, 0; New York, 1, 0, 0, 0.

Kidgell.—? Bapt. 'the son of Kiggel.' It is curious to find the surname still lingering in co. Somerset.

Matilda Kiggel, co. Hunts, 1273. A.

Robert Kiggel, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 178.

MDB. (co. Soms.), 1.

Kidman.—(1) Occup. 'the kidman,' a man who looked after young goats; cf. Cowman, Gooseman, Bullman, &c. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Kideman'; probably a variant of Cadman, q.v. This must be accepted as the chief parent.

Alan Kydeman, co. Norf., 1273. A.
Walter Kademan, co. Soms., ibid.

Guy Kidman, C. R., 4 Edw. IV. Alfric, son of Kideman, co. Norf.: FF. vii. 145.

1735. Charles Kidman, rector of Bannham, co. Norf.: ibid. i. 353.

1743. Buried—Bathsheba, wife of the Rev. Brewer Kidman: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 296.

1744. Married—John Parkinson and Sarah Kidman: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 33. London, 3; MDB. (co. Hunts), 5.

Kidner.—Local, 'of Kitenare,' some estate or manor in co. Somerset that I am unable to identify. The modification of the name into Kidner is a natural one.

William de Kitenare, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 102.

William Kytenor, co. Soms., ibid. p. 142.

The surname is well represented in the county in the 19th century. A member of the family seems to have travelled into Yorkshire at an early period:

Adam Kitener, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 105.

London, 2; MDB. (co. Somerset), 8; Boston (U.S.), 1.

Kidney.—Local. An imitative corruption of Gidney, q.v. A good example of the principle laid down in this dictionary; cf. Kilby and Gilbey.

1593. Buried—John Kidney, or Kydney: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iv. 52.

1665. Married—Thomas Kidney and Mary Vellis: ibid. iii. 118.

Private Kidney (co. Lanc.) scored high in the first stage of the Queen's Prize at Wimbledon, July 10, 1888 (v. Daily Papers).

London, 1; Philadelphia, 6.

Kidson.—Bapt.; v. Kitson.

Kidwell; v. Keedwell.

Kifford, Kefford.—? Local, 'of Guildford'; possibly an old pronunciation. But perhaps, a sharpened form of Giffard, q.v.; v. Kidney.

George Galdeford, or Gilford, or Kifforde, 1556: Reg. Univ. Oxf. i. 212.

1623-4. John Kifford and Alice Butcher: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 134.

1744. Married—Thomas Kefford and Mary Banyan: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 35.

London, 1, 3.

Kift.—Nick. 'the kift,' i.e. the undertaking, the awkward. 'Kift, awkward, clumsy. West' (Halliwell).

John Kyft, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 80.

We find similar nicknames, such as Snell (q.v.) and Crees, in the same register; v. Crease.

1616. Edward Kyfte, co. Glouc.: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 352.

1703. Married—Joseph Lester and Eliz. Kift: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 51. MDB. (co. Soms.), 1; Philadelphia, 3.

Kightley, Kightly.—Local, 'of Keighley,' q.v. The variants of this old surname are many.

1574. George Kyghtelye and Grisill Crayforde: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 63.

1808. Married—Samuel Kightley and Mary Costelow: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 389. London, 1, 1.

Kilbey, Kilby, Kilby, Kilbee, Kelby.—Local, (1) 'of Kilby,' a parish in co. Leicester; (2) 'of Kelby,' a parish in co. Lincoln. The latter seems to be the chief parent. Probably Gilbey, Gillbee, Gilby, &c., are in many cases but variants.

1712. Died—Anchor Kilby, sub-sacrist, co. Norwich: ibid. iv. 24.

1797. Married—Richard Kilbey and Eliz. Coffee: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 172.

London, 4, 5, 3, 0, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 0, 0, 0, 3; New York (Kilby), 2; Oxford (Kilbee), 2.

Kilbrick.—Local, 'of Kelbrook,' a chapelry in the parish of Thornton, W.R. Yorks, near Colne.

MDB. (co. Lanc.), 1.

Kilburn, Kilbourn, Kilborn, Kilbourne, Kilborne.—Local, 'of Kilburn,' (1) a hamlet, partly in the parish of Hampstead, co. Middlesex; (2) a parish in N. Rid. Yorks, seven miles from Thirsk; (3) a township in the parish of Horsley, co. Derby.

Ralph de Kylburn, co. Derby, 1273. A. 1587. Married—Richard Kylborne and Alice Sackfelde: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 14.

1626. — Isaac Kilbourne and Mary Fayrefax: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 56.

1746. — William Kilbourn and Ann Kilbourn: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 75.

1807. — John Kilbourn and Mary Ann Jennings: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 370.

London, 2, 1, 0, 0, 0; MDB. (co. Warwick), 0, 0, 1, 0, 0; New York, 3, 0, 0, 5, 1; Philadelphia, 7, 0, 0, 0.

Kilford.—Local, 'of Guildford' (?). This is highly probable; cf. Kisby and Gisby, Kilbey and Gilbey, &c.

1556. George Kilforde: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. xiv.

The following seems to be a curious variant:

1550. William Cocks and Margaret Kylyffeld: Marriage Lic. (London), p. 13. London, 1.

Kilham, Killam.—Local, 'of Kilham,' a parish in E. Rid. Yorks, near Great Driffild; also a township in the parish of Kirk-Newton, co. Northumberland.

John de Kyllum, co. York, Hen. III-Edw. I. K.

1709. Married—Richard Marsh and Jane Kilham: Canterbury Cath. p. 69.

MDB. (co. Sussex), 1, 0; (West Rid. Yorks), 1, 0; London, 0, 1; Philadelphia, 0, 2.

Killbull, Killbullock, Killhare, Killhog.—Nicknames for a pig-sticker or slaughter-man. Prof. Skeat says kill was originally to strike, to deaden with a blow. Thus Killbull and Killbullock meet the case exactly; M.E. culle, kill.

Reginald Cullebel (bol?), co. Oxf., 1273. A.

Killer.—(1) Occup. 'the kilner,' q.v.; a variant; cf. Keller (2). But v. Killbull. Perhaps it means a slaughterer or pig-sticker. (2)

Local, 'of Keller'; v. Keller (1). MDB. (co. Derby), 3; New York, 1.

Killhare, -hog; v. Killbull.

Killick; v. Killwick.

Killigrew.—Local, 'of Killigrew.' Mr. Lower says, 'In charters, Cheligrevus, a manor in the parish of St. Erme, co. Cornwall, where this celebrated family resided from an early date down to the reign of Richard II': Patr. Brit. p. 179.

1590. Robert Killigrew, co. Hants: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 181.

1688. Richard Baines and Francis Killingbeck: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 54.

1722. Bapt.—Thomas, s. William Killingbeck: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 134. London, 2, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 1.

Killingsworth, Killingsworth, Chillingworth, Killingsworth.—Local, 'of Killingsworth,' a township in the parish of Long Benton, co. Northumberland. Possibly another spot so called may have existed in co. Norfolk. Of course Shillingsworth is an imitative corruption of Chillingworth. With Chillingworth, cf. Church and Kirk.

London, 1, 0, 3, 0; MDB. (co. Norfolk), 0, 1, 0, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 0, 0, 2.

Killmaster; v. Kilminster.

Killwick, Killick, Killik.—Local, 'of Kildwick,' a parish in W. Rid. Yorks. With Killick, an inevitable variant, cf. Physic for Fishwick.

1601. Buried — John Kylleck : St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 205.
 1662. John Killicke and Isabel Covell : Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 57.

Kilner.—Occup. 'the kilner,' a limeburner, one who superintending a kiln. Kilner has been for many centuries a Furness (North Lanc.) surname, but it seems to have nearly died out. I could furnish scores of entries from the Ulverston register. The name survived in the town till some thirty years ago.

Kindersley.—(1) Local, 'of Kinnersley,' q.v. The d is intrusive; cf. riband for ribbon, or Simmonds for Simmons. (2) Local, 'of Kingsley.' There is evidence in favour of this view. Kingsley became Kinsley, as we know. This with the intrusive d would become Kindersley. The intrusive r also presents no difficulty; cf. Patterson for Pateson, &c.

1597. Thomas Kindesley, or Kingsley, London: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 220.

1618. Thomas Kynesley, of Warrington: Wills at Chester, i. 116.

As this name occurs in the vicinity of Kingsley it helps to support the above suggestion (v. Kingsley for further confirmation).

1613. Married.—Robert Kindersly and Mary Auston: St. Antholin (London), p. 150.

MDB. (co. Dorset), 1.

Kindon; v. Kingdon.

King.—Offic. 'the king.' There are four columns of Kings in the London Directory. An explanation is manifestly needed. Our Kings are of no royal descent; nor yet is the title always a mere nickname, like Caesar, Kaiser, Emperor (q.v.), from the royal bearing or appearance of the original nominee. The entries are in this direct and plain fashion:—Hamond le King. A. Robert le Kyng. G. Saher le King. H. The Hundred Rolls (1273) also furnish a William Littleking. There is also a Roger Wyteking. K. Stature and dress will account for these. The fact is the progenitors of our Kings acted in that capacity in the numerous festival and mock ceremonials of mediaeval times. At Epiphany-tide the Magi ('Kings of the East') were represented in every village.

'Thy mummeries, thy twelfe-tide kings
And queens, thy Christmas revellings.'
Herrick.

Besides the king and queen enthroned on May-day (who would maintain their regal title through the year, at least), there was the familiar 'King of Misrule,' whom every great nobleman possessed. In the manor of Ashton-under-Lyne (1422) we find 'Hobbe the King,' and a festival to be held there is under the supervision of 'Margaret, widow of Hobbe the King, Hobbe Adamson, Jenkin of the Wood,' &c. (v. Three Lancashire Documents, Cheth. Soc.). One more quotation will suffice:

'We, Adam Backhous and Harry Nycol, hath made account for the Kenggam (King-game) that same tyme don William Kempe, Kenge, and Joan Whytebrede, Queen, and all costs deducted, £4 5s. 0d.' Churchwarden's Accounts, Kingston-upon-Thames (Lysons).

'Queen' also existed as a surname, q.v. That King should be so largely represented now simply proves that every town and village had its festival, and that the 'King' was proud of his title; so were his children. Thus it became hereditary; v. Kingsman and Kingson.

Kingaby.—Local, 'of Kingerby,' a parish in co. Lincoln, five miles from Market Rasen.

1794. Married.—James Kingaby and Ann Andrews: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 106.

London, 2.

Kingcombe, Kingcome, Kingscomb.—Local, 'of Kingcombe,' a tithing in the parish of Toller Porcorum, near Beaminster, co. Dorset.

1789. Married.—John Nicholas and Bridget Kingcome: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 19.

Bristol, 1, 3, 0; London, 1, 0, 0; MDB. (co. Devon), 0, 2, 1.

Kingdon, Kingdom, King-

don.—Local, 'of Kingdon,' or more probably 'Kingsdon,' a parish in co. Somerset, near Somerton.

Kingdom is an imitative corruption; cf. Hansom for Hanson, or Ransom for Ranson. With Kindon, cf. Kinsley for Kingsley, or Kinsman for Kingsman. No doubt, as intimated in the index to the two registers, the two following entries concern the same couple:

1709. Married.—Henry Kindon and Eliz. Plucknet: St. Antholin (London), p. 122.

1710. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Henry and Eliz. Kingdon: St. John Baptist on Wallbrook, p. 176.

Thus Kindon and Kingdom are variants of Kingdon.

1752. Married.—Bryan Connor and Mary Kingdon: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 217.

Kingsley.—Local, 'of Kingsley,' (1) A township in the parish of Frodsham, co. Cheshire. Although Kingsley is somewhat scarce today in Cheshire and South Lancashire, it must not be forgotten that its variants Kingsley and Kindersley (q.v.) are familiar there. (2) A parish in co. Southampton, near Alton. (3) A parish in co. Stafford, near Cheadle.

There is no trace of Kinsman being what it seems to imply; cf. Kinsley for Kingsley. It is an imitative corruption of Kingsman, the said corruption being as old as the reign of Elizabeth.

John Kynnesman. ZZ. Leonard Kinsman. Z.

Since writing the above I find Simon Kynnesman, C. R., 9 Hen. VI.

Nevertheless this earlier date does not militate against the view I hold. For conclusive evidence, v. Kinsman. An analogous instance is met with in Kinsley (q.v.), a corruption of Kingsley through an intermediate form Kindsley. Thus, too, we find Kindsman as a similar intermediate step.

1656. — Mary, d. Reuben Kinsman: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 114.

1659. Married — William Hopkins and Sarah Kinsman: ibid. p. 34.

But the earlier forms of entry are after this fashion:

1533. Jeffrey Kingsman, rector of Sutton, co. Norf.: FF. ix. 348.

1573. Myles Kyngesman and Johanna Walker: Marriage Lic. (London), p. 58.

We may take it that the corruptions began at the beginning of the reign of Henry VI, when, the original meaning being forgotten, the possessors of the name took up the significant form of Kinsman.

1762. — Thomas Kingsnorth and Mary Howard: ibid. p. 112.
 London, 1; MDB. (co. Kent), 6.

Kingson, Kinson.—Nick, 'the king's son,' i.e. the son of the man who acted as king in the local festivals (v. King). It is impossible to entirely separate Kingson and Kingston: many of the latter, no doubt, started life as Kingson.

Reginald Kyngesone, co. Hunts, 1273. A.
 Simon Kyngeson, 1307. M.

The first three of the following entries occur together:

Johannes Kyng, hosteler, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 270.

 Thomas Kyngson, 1379: ibid.
 Thomas Kyngson, 1379: ibid. p. 177.
 Cf. Johanna Kyng', doghter, 1379: ibid. p. 175.

This is sufficient evidence of the derivation given above.

1585-6. Richard Kingson, laborer, and Margaret Wood: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 146.

1753. Married—James Millson and Ann Kingson: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 230.

Kingswell, Kingwell, Kingwill.—Local, 'at the king's well,' from residence thereby. The surname evidently hails from Hampshire, whence also Kingsmill comes. Indeed the two names are confounded in one instance.

1581. Ferdinando Kingswell, Hants: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 105.

A footnote to this entry records that in Matriculation he was returned as Ferdinando Kingsmill (v. Kingsmill).

Kinnard.—Bapt.; v. Kenward. An American variant.

Philadelphia, 6.

Kinnersley, Kinnersly, Kinseley, Kynnersley.—Local, 'of Kinnersley,' a parish in co. Salop, five miles from Wellington; also a parish in co. Hereford, four miles from Weobley. v. Kindersley, and cf. Kinsley.

Hugh de Kinardelegh, co. Hereford, Hen. III—Edw. I. K.

Kinnish; v. Kinch.

Kinsey.—Local, (1) 'of Kilnsea,' a parish in E. Rid. Yorks; (2) 'of Kilnsay,' a hamlet in the parish of Burnall, W. Rid. Yorks; (3) 'of Kingsley' (?). I cannot help coming to the conclusion that Kinsey in cos. Ches. and Lanc. is a variant of Kingsley. The g was lost in Kinsley, q.v., and the l in Kinsey. I doubt not that in the South of England most of our Kinseys are modifications of Kingsley (q.v.); cf. Kinsman for Kingsman, or Kinsley for Kingsley.

Kinsley, Kinsly, Kinseley, Kinzley.—Local, 'of Kingsley,' q.v. This name is found in the Cheshire and Lancashire neighbourhood of Kingsley. No doubt a variant. In the Index to the Wills at Chester (v. infra) the two names are treated as the same. A parallel case is met with in Kinsman for Kingsman, q.v. We even find the intermediate form of Kindsman. Under the one heading Kingsley, the Index to the Reg. Univ. Oxf. gives the following variants: Kindesley, Kingesley, Kinsley, and Kyngysley. The d in the instances below is therefore merely intrusive. v. Kindersley.

Boston (U.S.), 5.

Kirkham.—Local, 'of Kirkham,' a parish in co. Lanc. This parish is one of the largest in the county, comprising about 130 square miles, or 41,736 statute acres. Naturally such an area gave birth to a local surname, and although no great family of Kirkham can be recorded, the name made its way among the less important classes. To-day it is a familiar cognomen throughout the country, America, and the Colonies.

Knaggs.—Local, 'at the knaggs' or 'knagg,' from residence thereby.

A Yorkshire surname, as might be expected. 'Knag, the rugged top of a hill. North' (Halliwell).

'Knaggs, pointed rocks, or rugged tops of hills' (Brockett).

1620-1. Thomas Reekes and Joane Knagges: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 96.

Knapp.—Local, 'at the knap,' a summit, a hilltop, from residence thereon. 'Some high knap or tuft of a mountaine': Holland, trans.

of Pliny, bk. xi. c. 10 (v. Skeat on Knop). 'Knap, a hillocke, or knap of a hill': Cotgrave. Cf. knop (Exod. xxv. 31), the earlier form of knob, a round protuberance. So knab or nab for knap. 'Nab, the summit of an eminence. North'

(Halliwell). v. Knabwell.

Knatchbull.—I cannot classify this singular surname. Mr. Lower says (quoting Shirley's Noble and Gentle Men), 'The first recorded ancestor of the family is John Knatchbull, who had lands in the parish of Lymne, co. Kent, in the reign of Edward III, and there some of the name remained down to the time of Charles I. The main branch were at Mersham-Hatch, in the same county, by purchase temp. Henry VI, and there the present baronet yet resides' (Patr. Brit. p. 181).

1613. Married—George Knatchbull and Jone Gilbarde: Canterbury Cath. p. 55.

Kneller.—Occur, 'the kneller,' a bellringer; v. Knowler (1). The surname is English in spite of Sir Godfrey Kneller. Mr. Lower says it was formerly common in East Sussex (Patr. Brit. p. 181). But I cannot for one moment accept the local derivation he suggests.

Knifsmith, Neasmith, Na-smith.—Occur, 'the knifsmith,' a maker of knives; cf. Cutler. It has been stated as beyond need of evidence that Nasmith and Neasmith are corrupted forms of Nailsmith, a maker of nails. The instances furnished below seem to point strongly in favour of knifsmith. For the other theory I have found no evidence.

1594. Married—Roberte Knysmithe and Eliz. Weekes: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 15.

1595. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Robert Knysmythe: ibid. p. 99.

The earlier and complete form is found in the Valor Ecclesiasticus, viz. Henry Knysfemythe (F.). I forgot to note date and page (v. Index). But it will be seen at once by any candid observer that, failing evidence to the contrary, Neasmith and Nasmith are corruptions of the old Knifesmith. Besides, Nailer (v. Naylor) was the accepted occupational term for a maker of nails.

Knill.—Local; v. Knell.

Knipe.—Local, 'at the knap' (v. Knapp); a variant. This North-English surname existed for several centuries in Cartmel parish, North Lancashire. Though it died out there it made its way into the surrounding district. It must be considered a Furness surname.

Knocker.—(1) Local. Like Knowler (2), one who dwelt on a knoll, Knocker may mean one who dwelt on a knock (v. Knock). I cannot suggest any other derivation. But in favour of it is the fact that both Knock and Knocker are Kentish names. This will seem fairly strong evidence to some.

Knowlman; v. Knowler.

Knowlson.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Olive' or 'Oliver,' from the nick. Noll, patronymic Nollson; cf. Towler for Toller, or Toulson for Tolson, or Coulson for Colson. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Nowell' or Noel'; v. Noel.

Alexander Nouelson, Pardons Roll, 6 Ric. II.

Of these two derivations the last must be accepted as the more probable, as possessing evidence. But it must not be forgotten that the first is in strict accordance with rule; cf. Nibbs, Nobbs, Nabbs, Noppes, &c. In either case the initial K is imitative of the local Knowles, q.v.

1757. Married—Richard Nowlson and Margaret Wilcocks: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 71.
York, 4; London, 1; MDb. (N. Rid. Yorks.), 5.

Knowlton, Knowlden.—Local, 'of Knowlton,' a parish in co. Kent. There seems to be little doubt that Knowlden is a lazily pronounced variant. Knowlton has flourished for some time in the United States. Various small spots would naturally bear the name; v. Knowles and Town.

Richard de Kholton, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 253.

The two following Kentish entries are strongly conclusive of the view that Knowlden is a variant of Knowlton:

1658. Married—Thomas Godfrey and Anne Knowlden: Canterbury Cath. p. 59.

Knox.—Local, 'of Knocks,' from residence on the lands of Knocks or Knox, co. Renfrew. The Knoxes were of that ilk at an early period, and sometimes wrote themselves of Ranfurly, whence the family of Knox, earls of Ranfurly in Ireland. The great Reformer was of this family (Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 182).

1618. William Laborer, London: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 369.

Labrey, Labbree, Labrie.—Occup. 'the labourer,' q.v. I suspect this is the true origin of this curious surname. Indeed, the following three entries seem conclusive on the point:

John Labray, of Burton in Kendall, 1645: ibid.

Thomas Labrey, of Burton, 1665: ibid.

The following, too, shows the half-stage:

William Laboura, of Browns in Middleton, 1710: ibid. (1681-1748), p. 161.

Thus the several stages would be: Laborer, Labberer, Labbere, Labrey, or Labbree; v. Labourer, for earlier instances.

Manchester, 2, 0, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 3, 0; New York, 3, 0, 1.

Lach, Lache.—Local, 'at the lache,' from residence beside a lache or lake. No doubt Lache as a surname is lost in Leach, and has materially helped to swell the large list in the Lancashire and Cheshire directories. In proof of this, v. Blackleach, i.e. 'the black lache or lake.'

Lacklove.—Nick. 'lack love,' a cold, phlegmatic man, the opposite of 'full love.'

Simon Lakelove, co. Bedf., 1273. A.

Lacy, Lacey, Lassey, Lassy.

—Local, 'de Laci,' from some place of that name in Normandy. Ilbert de Laci (Domesday). The surname has spread widely, and has representatives in every grade of society. The variants Lassey and Lassy are met by early forms of a similar character.

Ladychapman.—Occup. A curious compound; v. Chapman.

William Ladychapman, C. R., 25 Edw. III.

Ladyman.—Occup. 'the lady's man,' i.e. the servant of the lady, i.e. the baron's or squire's wife; cf. Matthewman, Addyman, Priestman, Vickerman. The origin is easily settled by a comparison of the first batch of entries, all but one being recorded in close juxtaposition.

Lakeman.—(1) Local, 'of Lakenham,' a parish in co. Norfolk. This corruption is one of many of a similar character; cf. Buckman for Buckenham, Putman for Putnam (Puttenham), Swetman for Swetnam (Swetenham), Deadman for Debnam (Debenham), &c. Lower's suggestion that it means the lake man, the man who lived by the lake, is not supported by any proof. (2) ?Bapt. 'the son of Lacman,' an old personal name. Lacman assisted Duke Richard of Normandy against Odo of Chartres (Freeman, Norm. Conq. i. 456). Lacman was king of Man, 1075–1093 (ibid. ii. 632). A Scandinavian name corresponding to Engl. Lawman. But I can find no corroborative evidence in the rolls of the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries.

Reginald de Lakeham, co. Norf., 1273. A. Geoffrey de Lakenham, co. Herts, 20 Edw. I. R. Simon de Lakenham, vicar of Tibenham, co. Norf., 1394: FF. v. 278. William Lakenham, rector of South Rington, co. Norf., 1511: ibid. vii. 402.

For another probable variant of Lakenham, v. Larkman.

London, 3; New York, 1; Boston (U.S.), 11.

Lamacraft.—Local, 'of Lambcroft,' a hamlet in the parish of Kelsterne, co. Lincoln. For suffix -craft instead of -croft, v. Craft and Crafter. There is one drawback to this derivation. Devonshire seems to be the home of the name. Probably there is or was a Lambcroft in that country. The second a is intrusive; cf. Ottaway and Greenaway for Ottway and Greenway.

William le Lambe, co. Camb., 1273. A. Richard le Lam, co. Northampton, ibid. Ingrida Lomb, co. Hunts, ibid.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Lambert,' from Lamb the nick., whence such diminutives as Lamb-in and Lamb-kin (q.v.) were found.

1558. William Justyce and Jane Lambe: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 19.

1665. Buried—Ann Lam, servant to Mr. Clark: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 236. London, 57, 4; New York, 60, 0; Philadelphia, 76, 1.

Lambard, Lambarde.—Bapt. 'the son of Lambert,' q.v. It might be thought that this was a corrupted form of Lombard (q.v.), a native of Lombardy, but the evidence is entirely in favour of the personal name Lambert; cf. Hibbard for Hibbert. For a second origin, v. Lambert (1), and cf. Coward for Cowherd.

Hugo Lambard, co. York, 1273. A.

1772. Married—John Lambelet and Sarah Starbuck: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 223. New York, 1.

Lambert. — (1) Occup. 'the lamb-herd'; cf. Calvert, Coward, Stoddard, Swinnart, and Shepherd; v. Hind. Most unquestionably many of our Lamberts represent the occupation of lamb-herd. The Yorkshire Calverts all stand for the old occupative calveherd.

Lambertson, Lamberson. — Bapt. 'the son of Lambert.' I am not certain whether or not this surname still exists in England.

John Lambertson, son of Nicholas Lambertson, 1603, co. Lanc.: Exchequer Depositions, L. & C. R. S. p. 11.

The above lived at Warton, Lancaster. A century later we find the name, slightly abbreviated, in a neighbouring parish:

Thomas Lamberson, of Bolton-le-Sands, 1715: Lancashire Wills at Richmond (1681-1748), p. 162.

Lambin, Lampin, Lamin, Laming, Lammin, Lammings, Lamping. — Bapt. 'the son of Lambert,' from the nick. Lamb and dim. Lamb-in; cf. viol-in, Robin, Col-in. The g in Laming, &c., is excrement (cf. Jennings), and the p for b in Lampin is a common exchange; cf. Lampson and Lampett.

Lambyn Clay played before the King at Westminster, at the great festival in 1306 (Popular Music of the Olden Time, Chappell, i. 29). The Flemish Lambert had a great influence on English nomenclature for a time, nearly as great, in fact, as Baldwin.

Later the b has been dropped, and Laming or Lammings are the usual forms, especially in co. Lincoln, where Lambert (owing to Flemish immigration) was exceedingly common in the surname period. As an interesting proof of this, v. Lammiman.

1683. Married—Roger Laming and Rachel Ball: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 43. London, 1, 0, 0, 6, 1, 1, 1; MDB. (Lincoln), 0, 0, 0, 8, 3, 6, 0; Boston (U.S.) (Laming), 3.

Lambkin, Lampkin, Lambking, Lamkin. — Bapt. 'the son of Lambert,' from the nick. Lamb and dim. Lamb-kin. A Flemish introduction, no doubt; cf. Wilkin, Simpkin, &c. The g in Lambking is an excrement, as in Jennings.

Lambole, Lamboll, Lamble.

—Local, 'of Lampole.' I do not know where the locality is. Of course the suffix is -pole = pool.

John Lampole, co. Norf., 1366: FF. vii. 242.

The final d in the following name is an excrement:

Lamprey, Lampray.—Local, 'of Lamprey,' evidently a Devonshire name. No more a fish-name than is Salmon, or Chubb, or Spratt, or Herring. The same individual is thus referred to:

William de Lanteprey, co. Devon, 1273. A.

Lampson, Lamson.—Bapt.; v. Lamin.

Lamyman; v. Lammiman.

Lancashire.—Local, 'from Lancashire'; cf. Wiltshire, Derbyshire, &c. Oddly enough we often find these county names well represented in the very shires which the bearers had left to seek their fortunes. The explanation is, these wanderers did not go far, probably over the border only, into the next county, and their sons or grandsons were likely to return, bearing the surname that had been given to them in the place of their brief sojourn.

Lance.—Bapt. 'the son of Lancelot,' from nick. Lance (v. Yonge, ii. 120), not from Lawrence. The nick. form is found for centuries on the Anglo-Scottish border, where Lancelot was one of the favourite font-names. The same individual is described under both guises in the two following entries:

Lancelot Hodshon, 1663: KKK. iv. 299.
Lance Hodgshon, 1663: ibid.

Landless.—Local. In the Modern Domesday Book for co. Lancaster occurs 'Ralph Landless, Blackpool, 25 acres, 2 roods, 2 perches.' This has a very contradictory look, but no doubt the surname is of local origin, the suffix being -less; v. Lees.

MDB. (co. Lancaster), 1; Manchester, 1; Philadelphia, 3.

Landman.—Occur. 'the landman,' one who looked after the launde or open wood, especially the beasts of chase that found covert around; v. Land, Lund, &c.

Langabeer.—Local, 'of Langabeer.' 'In this neighbourhood (Lidford, co. Devon) we find Langabeer, Beardon, Beer Alston, Beer Ferrers' (Taylor's Words and Places, p. 179). The meaning of this place-word is the long byre, the long dwelling, or farm; cf. Scotch byre, a stall, Icelandic boer, a farmstead. The a is intrusive for the sake of euphony; cf. Greenaway, Ottaway, or Hathaway.

London, 1.

Langbachelor.—Nick. 'the long bachelor.' The instance below is amusing, with its intrusive a; cf. Greenaway for Greenway; v. Bacheller.

William le Langabachelor, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 180.

Langcake.—? Nick.; cf. Blanchpain, Whitbread, Cakebread, &c. Seemingly a N. England name.

London, 7, 3; Oxford, 3, 1; New York, 3, 0.

Langhorn.—? Local. At first sight this might seem to be a nick. for a huntsman, &c., from the length of the horn he carried; cf. Shakespear, Wagstaff, &c. Probably, however, it is local, from some piece of land so called from its shape. Then the surname would originally be 'at the lang horn,' from residence thereby; cf. Hartshorn, which is local. Also v. Horn.

London, 3; MDB. (co. Devon), 1; New York, 1; Philadelphia, 3.

Langmead, Langmaid,

Longmate.—Local, 'of Langmead,' i.e. the long meadow.

Langmaid shows the usual later tendency towards an imitative corruption. Seemingly a Devonshire surname, judging by the directories. And yet it is clear that there was another Langmead in the Eastern counties. Longmate is a palpable corruption. Cf. Broadmeadow.

Larkin, Larking.—Bapt. 'the son of Lawrance,' pronounced Larence, whence the nick. Larry, dim. Lar-kin; cf. Wil-kin. The g is, of course, excrescent. Although I have not much direct evidence, there can be no doubt about the origin.

Larkman.—Local, 'of Lakenham,' a parish in co. Norfolk. The local surname became unquestionably Lakeman, q.v. As Larkman is a Norfolk and Suffolk surname, we may suppose that it is the result of a local pronunciation with long a; Lahkman would soon become Larkman. I doubt not this is the true derivation; cf. Swetman for Swetenham, or Deadman for Debenham.

Larnder; v. Launder.

Larrett, Larritt.—Bapt. 'the son of Lora,' or 'Laura,' or 'Laurencia'; dim. Lorette or Laurett. 'It was the Provençal Lora de Sades, so long beloved of Petrarch, who made this one of the favourite romantic and poetical names, above all, in France, where it is Laure, Lauretta, Loulon' (Yonge, i. 368). But possibly Larrett or Larrit is a dim. of Larry, the nick. of Laurence. Still the origin would be the same.

Latham, Leatham, Lathom,

Leatham, Leethem, Leatham,

Leetham, Lethem.—Local, 'of Lathom,' a chapelry in the parish of Ormskirk, co. Lanc. The surname has ramified very strongly and spread far and wide, probably from lade or lathe, a barn. A distinguished family took their name from this place. In Yorkshire this surname took the form of Leatham and Leathom, unless it had a separate local origin. But the meaning is the same (v. Leathes), as leath is found to be a Yorkshire form of lade or lathe mentioned above; literally, therefore, 'the barn-house.'

Lax, Laxe.—? Local, 'at the lake,' from residence thereby. The chief home of this surname is co. Somerset, where we find Lack (i.e. Lake) at an early period. A.S. lac (Skeat); Fr. lac, a lake. Hence a surname Lack, and with the final s (cf. Holmes, Styles, Brooks, Sykes, &c.) Lacks. This by and by would become Lax; cf. Dix Rix, Wix, Wilcoxon, for Dicks, Ricks, Wicks, Wilcockson. This seems to me a simple solution.

Layer.—Occup. 'the layer,' i.e. a stone layer (Latinized into cubatores), one who sets the stones in building, a waller. 'Layer, or werkare wythe stone and mortere, cementarius': Prompt. Parv. p. 294, and v. Way's note thereon.

Probably the term was familiar to co. Norfolk, as the above quotation suggests, for Layer has been a Norfolk surname for many centuries.

In the contract for building Fotheringay Church, 1425, the chief mason undertakes neither to 'set mo nor fewer freemasons, rogh setters, ne leyers' upon the work but as appointed (Dugdale, Mon. iii. 164).

Layland, Leyland, Leeland, Leland.—Local, 'at the lay land.' Two parishes in co. Lanc. bear the name of Layland or Leyland. A valuable note by Way in the Prompt. Parv. (p. 285) on the word 'lay, londe not telyd,' explains the meaning. Amongst other authorities he quotes 'laylande; terre nouvellement labourée' (Palsgrave); 'a leylande, frisca terra' (Cath. Ang.); 'selio, a lee lande' (Ortus). Thus Layland means fallow or unploughed land. For the connexion of lay with lea and lee, v. Lee.

Layman. — ? — Mr. Lower thinks this is a personal name, and the same as Layamon, who transcribed the Roman de Brut. I would suggest that it is only a variation of Lawman, q.v.—or perhaps of Leman, q.v.

Leadbeater, Leadbetter, Leadbitter, Lidbetter, Liberty(?).—Occup. 'the lead-beater'; cf. Goldbeater. It is probable that Liberty is a corruption, the intermediate form being Libiter. The following entry strongly confirms this view:

Leader.—Occup. 'the leader,' a carrier, a carter. Farmers still lead hay in the North, as for instance in my old parish (Ulverston). 'Lede wythe a carte, caruco': Prompt. Parv. Mr. Way quotes from the Liber Niger Regis, Edw. IV, an ordinance commanding that no seller of wheat for the use of the King's house 'be compelled to lede or carrie his wheete' more than ten miles at his own cost. Water-leaders for water-carriers was the old familiar term for the occupation; v. Waterleader; cf. Loder or Loader, q.v.

Leason.—Bapt. 'the son of Lettice'; v. Leeson.

Leatham.—Local; v. Latham.

Leather, Leathers.—Bapt. 'the son of Leather.' Although I have scarcely any instances, there can be no doubt of the origin of names prefixed with Leather. Leather was a personal name. 'One Lethar was a bishop in the days of Æthelbert. Cod. D. pl. 981' (Lower, Patr. Brit. p. 190). Hence such localities as Letheringham and Letheringsett, and such local surnames as Leatherdale, Leatherby, Leatherhead, or Leatherbarrow. Leatherwine occurs as a single name (without surname), co. Camb. 1273. A. (vol. ii. p. 493). With this cf. Bald-win, Un-win, &c.; v. Liverpool.

1582. Buried—Alyce Lether, daughter of William, of the plague: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 107.

Adam Letherman, C. R., 12 Edw. III. pt. iii.

Philadelphia, 6, 1.

Leathes, Leathe, Leath.—Local, 'of the lathes,' i.e. the barns, the grange; v. Lade. The surname has arisen in several localities.

'Lathes is a hamlet next unto Warnpool, and was so called of a grange or farm which the Lord of Whitrigg had there. Of that place the family of the Lathes took their name . . . until Adam Leathes, now owner of the demesne thereof, sold the tenements and residue of the hamlet to the inhabitants. . . . It was given by Robert, the son of Robert de Dunbretton, to his kinsman Henry, whose posterity were thereupon called de le Leaths': E. and F., co. Cumb., p. 76.

Appended is a quotation:

'Robertus filius Roberti dedit Leathes Henrico fratri suo, Hen. III': Gilpin.

Thomas atte Lathe, rector of Stokesby, co. Norf., 1356: FF. xi. 251.

Johannes del Lethe, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 50.

A family of Leathes sprung up in co. Norfolk, and is still represented.

The manor house was lately called the Lathes, it stands a little distance from Pokethorp Street.' Pokethorp Manor, Norwich: FF. iv. 428.

Again, we read of the same manor:

'John Corbet (4 Edw. VI.) had a lease of the Cellerie's, or St. Leonard's meadow, containing six acres, lying between the river and street, the Lathes close, and fold-course, and liberty of shak . . . in the manor house and yard, and all thereon built, called the Lathe-yard': ibid. iv. 429.

The origin of the Norfolk Leathes is thus distinctly apparent.

Stanley Leaths, rector of Matlack, Norfolk, 1741: ibid. viii. 137.

'Thomas Atte-lathe married first Alice, daughter and heir of Sir William Wisham, and Margaret his wife, and in her right presented as lord to the church of Elingham Parva, in Norfolk, in 1468': ibid. vii. 449.

Lee.—Local, 'at the lea,' from ley, legh, lea, or lay, a meadow, a grassy plain. The local names with which this word is incorporated as cf. or suffix are innumerable; cf. Leighton, Chudleigh, Eckersley, Leyburn, &c. Of itself, also, it represents countless spots styled Lee, Lees, Leigh, Lea, Leece (a village in Furness), &c. The local surnames built upon it are equally numerous, comprising (without adducing compound forms) Lee, Lees, Leece, Leece, Legg, Legge, Legh, Leigh, Ley, Lay, and Lea, all of which see under their respective heads.

Leece.—(1) Local, 'at the lees,' v. Lees; cf. Ellice for Ellis, or Avice for Avis. (2) Local, 'of Leece,' a hamlet near Ulverston, in the Furness district of North Lancashire. The derivation is the same as (1). Leece is still found as a surname in Ulverston and the neighbourhood. It is commonly met with in the Ulverston Church registers.

Leeming.—(1) Local, 'of Leeming,' a village near Bedale, co. York. (2) Personal, 'the son of Leming' (v. Halliwell, and Prompt. Parv. pp. 295-6). In the Towneley Mysteries Leming is a horse's name, from its bright, flashing colour.

'Say, Malle and Stott, wille ye not go? Lemyng, Morelle, White-horne, io.'

The editor (Preface, p. xii) says that Leming as a cow's name occurs in the will of a West Riding yeoman. That Leming was a personal name and became a surname seems indubitable.

Leeper, Leaper.—Nick. 'the leper,' a variant; v. Lepper. The fact that Leper or Lepper is now nearly extinct shows a tendency to throw it off as objectionable. Hence, probably, the deceptive-looking Leeper.

Legard, Ledgard, Ledger, Ledgar, Ledgerson.—Bapt. 'the son of Leger.' I find no evidence in favour of Lower's statement that the origin is 'le garde,' the guard or keeper. The final d is a common excrescence. St. Leger was a canonized priest of Chalons, the French form being Leguire (Yonge, ii. 430). With the intrusive d in Ledger, cf. Rodger for Roger.

Leggatt, Leggett, Leggitt, Leggat, Leggate, Leggat.—(1) Local, 'at the lidgate' (q.v.), an inevitable corruption; 'atte Lidgate' or 'Lidgate' was one of our commonest entries, and must have left many representatives. (2) Offic. 'the legate,' an ambassador, a commissioner; M.E. legate, legat; O.F. legat.

Legh, Leigh.—Local, 'at the legh'; v. Lee. The reason why Leigh has so much larger a representation in the Manchester Directory than that of London lies in the fact that Leigh, a parish in South Lanc., early gave rise to a family name that has very strongly ramified. Of course the origin of the name is the same. The i in Leigh was inserted in more recent times.

Leland; v. Layland.

Leman, Lemmon, Lemon, Leeman, Leemon, Leaman, Limon.—Bapt. 'the son of Leman,' a corruption of Liefman. No doubt in some instances employed as a nickname, meaning dear one, sweetheart; cf. Leitchild.

'And hail that madowe, my leman.'
Townley Mysteries.

But its use as seen below compels us to place it mainly in the category of fontal names. The forms in the London Directory show little change. It was a familiar joke some few years ago to say that there were two Lemons in the House of Commons and only one Peel.

Boston (U.S.), 1.

Leton; v. Letton.

Lett, Letts, Lettson, Lettson, Letson.—Bapt. 'the son of Lettice' (Latin, laetitia, gladness). As a girl's name Lettice was very popular in its day. It is now rare. It suffered at the Reformation, and still more so in the Puritan era, not being a Bible name, and implying hilarity. Lett was the nick., Letts and Lettson being the patronymics. Lettson is occasionally a corrupted form of Lettson (cf. Ransom for Ranson, or Hansom for Hanson), but in general it is local (v. Lettson). It is said that a well-known doctor of the last century used to sign his prescriptions 'I. Lettson,' whence the following:

'When any patient calls in haste,
I physics, bleeds, and sweats 'em;
If after that they choose to die,
Why, what care I?

cf. Aldridge for Aldrich. Many surnames ending in -ridge seem to be of local origin; yet they merely represent the -rich or -rick, that is, the suffix of so many early personal names. Coleridge is local, Leveridge is personal.

Levett, Levett, Levette, Levitt.—(?) Local, 'of Livet.' Mr.
Lower says, 'From one of the places in Normandy called Livet. The Itin. de la Normandie mentions no less than eight of these' (Patr.
Brit. p. 194). This derivation seems probable.

Lew, Lewe.—Local, 'at the lew,' i.e. lee, a sheltered place
(v. lee, Skeat, who says the word lee is Scandinavian); cf. Lewthwaite, a local Cumberland surname, i.e. sheltered meadow.

Lewin, Levin, Levine, Le-

Leofwin,' from the popular form
Lewin or Levin. Of one Leofwine, a Warwickshire thegn, Professor Freeman quotes, 'Leuinus emit ab Alwino fratre suo,' and again,
'Hanc terram dixit Leuinus se tenere de Vlstano Episcopo' (Hist.

Lewis, Lewison, Levison.—
Bapt. 'the son of Louis' or 'Lewis' (for the history of this personal name read an interesting account in Yonge, ii. 387-9). Miss Yonge thinks Lewis is used by the Welsh as an Anglicanism of Llewelyn.

Ligget(t); v. Lidgate.

Light.—Nick. 'the little,' a variant of Lyte; cf. Lightman, a later variant of Lyteman (i.e. Little-man); v. Lyte. It is quite possible that Light might refer to the light tread of the original bearer of the sobriquet, but I find no evidence.

Lightbourn, Lightbourne, Lightbound, Lightdown, Lightbowne.—Local, 'of Lightbourn.' Probably there are several spots so called in co. Lancashire.

A suburb of my old parish (Ulverston, North Lancashire) is called Lightburne, the beck or burn flowing alongside (v. Burn). With the corrupted Lightbound, cf. Simmonds for Simmons, or riband for ribbon. The d, of course, is an excrescence. That Lightbown and Lightbowne are variants of Lightbourn is proved below, although proof is not needed. There is no representative of any of the forms in my London Directory (1870). It is well confined to co. Lancashire.

Lillyman, Lilleyman, Lilliman, Lilliman.—Occup. 'the servant of Lilly,' q.v. One more instance of a fairly large class of surnames compounded of -man (i.e. servant) as suffix to the baptismal name of the master. The most conspicuous instances are Matthewman, Addyman, and Perryman, q.v. Although not entirely confined to that county, Yorkshire must be looked upon as the home of this batch of surnames.

Limbrick, Limrick.—(1) Local, 'of Lambrigg' (?), a township in the parish of Kendal, co. Westm. The suffix -brigg (bridge) often becomes brick; cf. Philbrick and Maybrick. (2) Local 'of Limerick' (?), with an intrusive b after m, as is so common. The surname would first become Limrick, then Lim-b-rick. I have an impression that if there are any low-lying hills about Limber in co. Linc. the origin is Limberigg, i.e. Limberidge, one who lived on the ridge thereby; cf. Coleridge, &c.

Limeburner.—Occup. 'the limeburner.' It is never safe to say a surname is extinct. Limeburner was in existence at the latter end of last century; cf. Linewright. Since writing the above I find the surname has crossed the Atlantic, and is in a fairly flourishing condition.

which the register of affidavits spells Lematre. So it may be but a French name Anglicized. There are six Lemaitres in the London Dir.

Limmer.—(1) Local, 'of Limber' (?). Limber Magna is a parish, and Limber Parva a hamlet, in co. Lincoln, near Caistor. Limmer is probably a variant, but v. Limner. (2) Occup. 'the limer,' a limeburner; v. Limewright and Limeburner. Limer would naturally settle down into Limmer.

Limner, Limmer, Lomer, Lommer.—Occup. 'the limner,' an illuminator of books, missals, &c. (v. Limmer for a different origin.)

'Parchement makers, skynners and plowers,

Barbers, boke-bynders, and lyminers.' Cocke Lorelle's Bote.

There need be no hesitation in accepting these as modern forms of this old and interesting occupative name. It is found, as already seen, as Lummer (with the n dropped) in Yorkshire in the 15th century. The following is unmistakable:

Lindow, Lindo.—Local, 'of Lindall,' in Furness, North Lancashire, a hamlet two miles from Ulverston. This became Lindaw, and then Lindow. Thus in the same district Presow (as a surname) represents the older Preesall, and Pithaw stands for Pichthall. Lindow has crossed the Duddon into Cumberland.

Lindsey, Lindsay, Linsey, Linzee, Lincey.—Local, 'of Lindsey,' Lindsey, a parish in co. Suffolk; no doubt it means the 'linden-isle.' Probably other spots are so called. A division of co. Lincoln is still called the 'Parts of Lindsey.' The instances below are widely separated, and point to more than one spot so called.

Ling, Linge.—(1) Local, 'at the ling,' one who resided on the heath or ling; cf. Heath, Gorst, Furse. 'Lyng of the hethe (lynge, or hethe)': Prompt. Parv. Mr. Way in a note easily proves that ling was a common term for heath. He adds, 'Skinner gives ling as the common appellation of heath in Lincolnshire.' (2) Local, 'of Ling,' a parish in co. Somerset, six miles from Bridgewater. Both Ling and Linge are familiar surnames in the county. Probably the origin is the same.

Lingard, Linguard.—Occup. 'the ling-ward' (?) or 'ling-guard' (?). I can only suggest this solution. The great Catholic historian was of Lincolnshire parentage. Canon Tierney, after stating this fact, says, 'The family name, with the accent on the first syllable, is still common in the district (Claxby), which, within the memory of persons yet alive, was a wild expanse covered with furze and ling' (Lingard's Hist. of Eng. i. 2, edit. 1854). Linnett, Linnet.—Bapt. 'the son of Linot,' which, no doubt, is the dim. of some familiar girl's name. Now we turn Caroline into the nick. Lina, which would become Linot with the dim. suffix. But Caroline was unknown in the surname epoch. Probably it was for Elenot, a dim. of Elen or Ellen. It must be remembered that Eleanora was a most popular girl's name at the period, and must have had its nicknames and dims.

Lippard.—Nick.; v. Leopard.

Lippett, Lippiatt.—Local; v. Lipyatt.

Lippincott, Lippencott.—Local, 'of Luffincott,' a parish in co. Devon, seven miles from Holsworthy. Mr. Lower says, 'The baronets (extinct 1829) traced their family into Devonshire in the 16th century, and there is little doubt that the name was originally Luffincott, from a parish in that county so called' (Patr. Brit. p. 196.) The surname is now very rare in England, but it has ramified in the most extraordinary fashion in the United States. I see no reason to doubt Mr. Lower's derivation. Everything points to a Devonshire habitat.

Liptrott, Liptrot, Libtrot.—? Local, 'of Liptrott' (?). I cannot find the spot. It is a well-established Lancashire surname. Mr. Lower, quoting Ferguson, says, 'It corresponds with a German name Liebetrut' (Patr. Brit. p. 196). In this case it would probably be a personal name.

Lipyatt, Lippett, Lippiatt.—Local, 'at the loop-gate,' from residence thereby. Either the gate (or yate) at the bend of the road, or the gate through a hole in the wall; cf. loop-hole (v. loop, Skeat). This compound local term occurs frequently in West-country records. It gave birth to a hamlet Lypeat, in the parish of Kilmersdon, co. Soms.

Littleboy, Littleboys.—Possibly a nickname, 'little boy'; synonymous with Littlepage and Smallpage (q.v.), but more probably local, -boy or -boys representing the common suffix -bois, a wood; cf. Mortiboy or Worboise. In this case it is doubtless the French Lillebois Anglicized and made imitative.

Lively, Liveley. — Local (?). Mr. Lower says, 'From natural disposition.' This may be so. More probably we must look for a local origin with the common suffix -ley, as in Morley or Ripley.

1543. Buried—Robarte Lyvely: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 179.

1540. Married—Robarte Kyng and Alys Liveley: ibid. p. 2.

London, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 2; New York, 2, 0.

Livens; v. Living.

Livermore. — Local, 'of Livermere,' two parishes, Great and Little Livermere, in co. Suffolk, about six miles from Bury St. Edmunds. From Suffolk the surname wandered into Essex, where it is still familiar as Livermore; cf. Whitmore for Whitemere.

1239. Agnes Livermere, co. Norf.: FF. vi. 150.

1668. Married—Richard Renoles and Eliz. Livermore: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 151.

1675-6. John Livermore, co. Essex, and Eliz. Peirson: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 251.

London, 7; MDB. (co. Essex), 7; Boston (U.S.), 26.

Liverpool. — Local, 'of Liverpool,' a city in co. Lancaster. I fear the surname is extinct in England. For the derivation of the name, v. Litherland. Probably the same Lither who owned the 'land' owned the 'pool' also.

Livesey, Livesley, Livezey, Livezley, Livzley, Livezey. —

Local, 'of Livesey,' a township in the parish of Blackburn, co. Lanc. Livesley is a corruption. By a curious freak the American variants in all cases turn s into z. The surname has established itself strongly in the United States.

'Livesey gave name to a family, the owners of Livesey Hall, . . . who became extinct early in this century, and of whom James Livesey in 2 Edw. VI held Livesey as a manor': Baines' Lanc. ii. 80.

Living, Liveing, Livens, Levinson, Livings. — Bapt. 'the son of Liven,' probably like Lewin (q.v.), a variant of Leofwin, the intermediate form being Lifin. Mr. Lower says, 'An Anglo-Saxon personal name. There was a Living, archbishop of Canterbury, and another Living, bishop of Worcester' (Patr. Brit. p. 197). The final g is excrement.

1789. Married—Alex. Cowie and Sarah Livingston: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 29.

London, 1, 5; Boston (U.S.), 4, 25.

Llewellin, Llewellyn, Llew-ellen, Llewallen. — Bapt. 'the son of Llewellyn' (Welsh). The double l in Welsh has always been a stumbling-block to the English; cf. Floyd for Lloyd. An instance of the difficulty occurs in the Wills at Chester (1545-1620), Lanc. and Ches. Rec. Soc:

Richard Thwellin, of Holt, 1618: p. 192.

1715. Married—Richard Luellyn and Eliz. Bromwich: St. Peter, Cornhill, ii. 71.

MDB. (co. Cumberland), 1; (co. Westmoreland), 10; New York, 4.

Longridge, Longrigg. — Local, 'of Langrigg,' a township in the parish of Bromfield, co. Cumberland. The surname derived from this place is now generally spelt Longridge (v. Langridge) and Longrigg.

Margaret Langrige, of the parish of Burton, 1598: Lancashire Wills at Richmond (1457-1680), p. 180.

1805. Married—John Gooch and Ann Longridge: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 339. London, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Cumberland), 0, 7; New York, 0, 1; Philadelphia, 1, 0.

Longsdon, Logsdon.—Local, 'of Longstone'; v. Longson. There can be no doubt that Logsdon is Longsdon with the n elided. It is equally evident that both Longsdon and Logsdon are not variants of Longden, which would give a senseless signification to the name. We may safely presume that Longstone became Longsdon, and then Logsdon. It is pleasant to have a view of this kind corroborated after making the statement. Since writing the above I find Longsdon to be a familiar Derbyshire surname, and not unknown in the immediate neighbourhood of Longstone.

1617. Bapt.—Anne, d. John Logsdon: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 78. London, 2, 2; MDB. (co. Derby), 2, 0.

Longson.—Local, 'of Longstone.' Great Longstone is a chapelry three miles from Bake-well, co. Derby. Little Longstone is a hamlet almost equidistant from the same town. Many names ending in -son are local, the t in the suffix -stone being elided. It is just possible that Longson is an abbreviation of Lawrenson (the son of Lawrence), a surname peculiar to Lancashire. To many this will seem the more probable derivation. To one or the other Longson must be referred. Nevertheless the fact that Longson is a Derbyshire name is strong evidence in favour of my first view.

Ulverston, 2; Manchester, 2; MDB. (co. Derby), 1.

Longstaff, Longstaffe, Langstaff.—Nick. The sobriquet of some sergeant, bailiff, catchpoll, or other officer of the law. Nicknames from the weapon or badge of office were very common; cf. Shakespear, Wagstaff, and tipstaff.

cf. Matthewman, Sandeman, Addiman, &c., and v. Lowrie.

West Rid. Court Dir., 2.

Lory.—Bapt. 'the son of Lawrence'; v. Lowrie.

Lott.—Bapt. 'the son of Lott.' All my instances are from the South-Eastern counties. Probably an immigrant from the Low Countries. As Abraham was common, it seems natural that Lot should be the same. The story, as an attractive one, would be familiar to the peasantry. The leading personages of the Old Testament as well as the New were utilized at the font.

Loveday.—Bapt. 'the son of Loveday.' Of the same class as Christmas, Pentecost, Nowell, &c. The font-name lingered on as Lowdy in Cornwall, the last refuge of many old English favourites, till the 18th century, and is not yet extinct. 'John Lovesman' (John, the servant of Loveday) occurs in the Hundred Rolls, 1273, in co. Norfolk (i. 439). The word occurs in Piers Plowman:

'I kan holde love-dayes
And here a reve's rekenyns.'

Halliwell says: 'A day appointed for settlement of differences by arbitration.'

'But helle is fulle of suche discorde,
That there may be no loveday.'

Lovekin, Luffkin, Lufkin, Lufkins.—Bapt. 'the son of Love' (q.v.), from the dim. Lovekin. This has now almost universally settled down into Lufkin; cf. Watkin for Walter, or Tompkin for Thomas. From Shropshire Lovekin came northwards into Cheshire, and as Lufkin is now in the Manchester Directory.

(2) Nick. 'the love,' i.e. the little wolf. 'It is a derivative of the Lat. lupus, wolf, thus: Lupus, Loup, Lupellus, Louvel, Lovel': Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 200. Lovel was, like Talbot, a dog's name. 'William Collingborne, executed in 1484, wrote as follows of the favourites of Edward III (Catesby, Ratcliffe, and Lovel):

"The Ratte, the Catte, and Lovell, our dogge, Rule all England under the Hogge.'"

(Lower, ibid. p. 200). It is curious to notice that Wolf was used both as fontal name and nickname at the same period; v. Wolff, and also Lowell.

Lucraft, Luckcraft, Luckraft, Loucraft.—Local, 'of Leacroft,' a township in the parish of Cannock, co. Stafford. The suffix -croft is frequently found as -craft; v. Craft. A novel published several years ago by Messrs. Besant and Rice, entitled The Case of Mr. Lucraft, has helped to give prominence to this surname. There can be little doubt that all the above forms are variants of Leycraft or Leacroft. Of course smaller spots than Leacroft in Staffordshire may have originated the surname, as the term leacroft would be a common place-word; v. Lea and Croft.

Lund, Loud, Lounds,

Lowndes, Lownds, Lowne,

Lond.—Local, 'at the laund' or 'lund,' i.e. lawn, which is a modern form, an open space in a wood, a glade. 'Lawnde of a wode, saltus': Prompt. Parv.

'At the hartes in these hye laundes.'
Morte Arthur.

A property in my late parish (Ulverston) has been from time immemorial called 'The Lund.' A high piece of greensward, it once overlooked the forest of Furness. The final s in Lowndes, &c., is probably the patronymic, as in Williams, Jennings, &c.; cf. Knowles, Styles, Brooks, Holmes, &c.

1750. Married—Samuel Lusby and Grace Fitch: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 178.

London, 3; MDB. (co. Lincoln), 1; Philadelphia, 1.

Luscious.—Nick. 'the luscious.' Professor Skeat says (v. luscious), 'It evidently arose (I think) from attaching the suffix -ous to the M.E. lusty, pleasant, delicious.' My instance below suggests rather that the suffix was -wise (way, mode); cf. righteous from M.E. rightwis. The two corruptions go hand in hand. My instance is 300 years earlier than those usually found in dictionaries, &c.

Thomas Lustwys, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

Luscombe, Luscomb.—Local, 'of Loscombe,' (1) a locality in the parish of Illogan, co. Cornwall; (2) 'of Loscombe,' a hamlet in the parish of Netherbury, co. Dorset; (3) 'of Luscombe,' an estate near Dawlish, co. Devon, which belonged to the family, and was their residence temp. Henry V; and probably much earlier, as the name of Hugh de Luscombe occurs in that county, 9 Edw. I' (Lower, Patr. Brit. p. 203). No doubt the last is the true home of nine-tenths of the Luscombes or Luscombs of our directories.

Lynch.—Local, 'at the lynch,' from residence thereby. 'A.S. hlinc, a hill, but especially a balk or boundary, a sense still preserved in modern provincial English linch' (Skeat, v. link). 'Linch, a balk of land (Kent). Any bank or boundary for the division of land' (Halliwell). A large portion of the New York Lynches must be ascribed to an Irish parentage, as such prefixes as Michael, Patrick, and Terence abound (v. New York Directory).

Lyon, Lyons.—(1) Bapt. 'of Leone.' Many Jews in modern times have taken the name of Lyon (the Lion of the tribe of Judah). This seems to have been an early custom, judging by my first reference. The London Directory will prove by its personal names how Jewish the surname is.

Lysons, Licence.—? Local.

This name was 'spelt in the 16th century Lysans, Leyson, and Lison. Probably derived from Lison, a place in the department of Calvados, in Normandy' (Lower, Patr. Brit. p. 204). Of course Licence is an imitative variant.

Lythgoe, Lithgoe, Lithgow,

Lythgow.—Local, 'of Lythgoe.' I cannot find the spot. This is a South Lancashire surname; but it has a Scotch look. Lower says, 'A contraction of Linlithgow, a well-known Scotch town': Patr. Brit. p. 196. He furnishes no proof. Eight persons named Lithgow appear in the County Directory of Scotland, 1882.

M

Maas, Maass.—? —. An importation from the Low Countries, probably. The published and unpublished 'Household Expenses' of kings, queens, and wealthy nobles invariably show that the minstrels in attendance were foreigners.

Hanekin Almond, varlet of the Countess of Surrey: Household Book of Queen Isabella, 1358, Cot. MS. Galba, E. xiv.
Janin Maas, varlet of the Countess of Surrey: ibid.

The first of these two was evidently a German by descent.

London, 1, 1, 1; Philadelphia, 2, 0, 0.

Mabley, Maberley, Maberly. — Bapt. 'the son of Mabel,' familiarly Mabley. I can only furnish a few instances out of many. Not as a rule to be confounded with Moberley (q.v.), but confusion would easily arise. It is quite possible that Maberley is the same as the local Moberley, but I doubt it.

Mace. — Bapt. 'the son of Mace.' Lower says, 'Originally Macé, a French nurse-name of Matthew.' As with all other fontal names, this was turned into a feminine, as in the following instances:

Massia Billesby, C. R., 24 Hen. VI. 1273. A.

Duce fil. Masse, co. Hunts, ibid.
Adam Mace, co. Oxf., ibid.

William Mace, co. Bucks, ibid.

The following, no doubt, refer to the same individual:

Macius de Besile, co. Oxf., 1273.
Macias de Bettle, co. Oxf., ibid.

London, 9, 0; New York, 0, 39.

Machell. — Nick.; originally 'le Machel' or Manchell, 'bad whelp,' Latinized as Malus-Catulus. A certain Roger Malus-Catulus was Vice-Chancellor of England; but I have lost my reference to this. The following occur in records of the Machells of Crackenthorpe:

Halthe le Machel, temp. Hen. I: Transactions of Camb. and West. Ant. Arch. Soc. viii. 418-9.

Humfrey le Machel, temp. Henry II: ibid.

Machen, Machin, Machan, Machon. — Bapt. 'the son of Matthew'; a familiar Yorkshire surname found in every district. The O.F. nick. of Matthew was Mace or Mache, and this, with the dim. -on or -in, became Machon and Machin. It is commonly found in the Poll Tax (1379). I only furnish a few instances. It has left an indelible mark upon Yorkshire nomenclature.

Beatrice Machon, 1379: ibid.
Johannes Machon, 1379: ibid. p. 198.
Willelmus Mathon, 1379: ibid.

The first two entries lie in the same hamlet, so also the last three. Therefore Mathon may be looked upon as a more English form eventually settling down to Mattin, as in Mattinson; v. Mace, Masson (2), Mattin, and Maton.

Makeson.—Bapt. 'the son of Margaret,' from the nick, Magg or Maggy. The son of Magg or Maggy became Maggeson; this, when sharpened, became Mackeson. In the same way Moggsen became Mockson and Moxon, q.v. There is no difficulty about the derivation. The solution is very simple.

Madswain.—Nick. 'the foolish swain'; cf. Goodswain, Littleswain.

Alan Madswayn, co. Essex, 1273. A.

Mager; v. Major.

Maggot, Maggotson.—Bapt. 'the son of Margaret,' from O.F. Margot, sharpened and abbreviated in England to Magot. This form was especially liked in northern counties. In the 14th century it was enormously popular in Yorkshire. The mag-pie was equally familiar as the magot-pie. Shakespeare says:

'Augurs, and understood relations, have.
By magot-pies, and coughs, and rooks brought forth
The secret'st man of blood.'

Macbeth, Act iii. sc. 4.

With this, cf. Magota Pye, 1379, P. T. Yorks. p. 45, an evident connexion of ideas. v. Madgett.

1646. Ellen Maghull, of Aintree, widow: Wills at Chester, ii. 145.

Liverpool, 2; Philadelphia, 32.

Magnus.—Bapt. 'the son of Magnus.' A North-British name. In Shetland, Magnus as a font-name is tenth in order of frequency, and eleventh as a surname in the form of Manson (Magnus-son). There are also seventeen Magnus-sons; v. Scotsman, Oct. 16, 1886.

1780. Married—William Magnus and Alice Sherman: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 310.
London, 9; Boston (U.S.), 1; New York, 19.

Magson; v. Maggs.

Mahenild.—Bapt. 'the son of Mahinchild' (Yonge, ii. 415).

Mahenild Brycth, co. Norf., 1273. A.
Alan Mahenylld, co. Norf., ibid.
Alan Mahgenylld, co. Norf., ibid.

I do not see any of this name in modern registers.

Maiden, Madin.—Nick. 'the maiden.' Perhaps the bearer was somewhat effeminate; cf. Milksop. But probably a servant, a female attendant; v. Mann and Servant. This is practically settled by such an entry as:

Alicia Martynmayden, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 157.

Matilda Marschalmaydyn, 1379: ibid. p. 111.

An instance of Mayden as a surname from the same register will be found below.

Robert le Mayden: Fines Roll, 12 Edw. I.

Adam le Maiden, co. Camb., 1273. A.
Johanna Mayden, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 105.

1730. Married—Thomas Hyett and Jane Maiden: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 311.

1753. — George Madin and Ann Harris: St. Mary Aldermary, p. 52.

London, 1, o; Sheffield, o, 1; West Rid. Court Dir., o, 1; Manchester, 2, o; Philadelphia, 2, o.

Maidment, Maidman.—Bapt. 'the son of Maymond'; v. Mayman.

For corruption into -ment, cf. Rayment (Raymond) and Garment (Garmund); for -man, cf. Wyman (Wymond) and Osman (Osmund).

1744. Married—John Maidman and Eliz. Anderson: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 38.

1749. — John Maidman and Ann Walker: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 43.

1802. — Moses Lavell and Ann Maidment: ibid. ii. 270.

London, 5, 1.

Maidstone.—Local, 'of Maidstone,' now as a surname more generally Mayston, q.v.

1690. Bapt.—Robert, s. Robert Maidstone: St. Antholin (London), p. 107.

1702. Buried—Charles, s. John Madston: ibid. p. 115.

Maidwell.—Local, 'of Maidwell,' a village in co. Northampton, ten miles from Northampton. Probably distinct from Meadwell, q.v.; cf. Maidenwell, a parish in co. Lincoln, five miles from Louth.

John Maydenwell. Pat. Roll, 43 Edw. III. 1547. Bapt.—Annes Madewell: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 3.

1687. Married—James Maydwell and Annabella Coningsbey: St. Mary Aldermary (London), p. 33. London, i.

Maile; v. Male.

Mailmaker, Maler.—Occup. 'the mail-maker.' A manufacturer of bags or wallets. M.E. male, a bag, whence mail-coach, &c.

John de Redinges, maler, 4 Edw. III. Freeman of York, i. 26. Henry Malemaker. RR. 2.

Main, Maine.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Main'; v. Mayne (1).

Ralph fil. Main, co. Northumb., 1166: KKK. v. 9.

Walter fil. Main, co. Northumb., 1168: KKK. vi. 11.

(2) Local, 'of Maine'; v. Mayne (2).

1798. Married—Thomas Main and Jane Dawson: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 190. 1805.—William Dodson and Ann Maine: ibid. p. 331. London, 14, 4; Boston (U.S.), 6, 4.

Mainprice, Mainprise, Mainprize, Mimpriss.—Offic. or nick. 'the mainprice,' i.e. (1) one who is security for another, or (2) one who has found sureties for his appearance on the proper day: a prisoner at large. 'Mainprice, one who is bail-pledge, or security for another person': Bailey's Dict., 1742 (v. Outlaw). Mimpriss was an inevitable modification or corruption. In another form it occurs as early as 1440, 'Maynprysyd, menprisyd (maym-prysyd or memprisyd), manucaptus, fidejussus': Prompt. Parv. An entry below exactly corresponds to one of these forms.

1625. Buried—Roberte, s. Thomas Mempris: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 186.

1659. Married—Isaack Mempris and Mary Allen: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 103. 1663.—William Morgan and Elizabeth Mempris: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 37. London, 1, 0, 0, 1; Wirksworth, co. Derby, 0, 1, 0, 0; Derby, 0, 0, 3, 0.

Mainwaring, Mannering.—Local, 'of the manor of Warin.' This family, so long established in co. Cheshire, claim to have come with the Conqueror in the person of Ranulph de Meinilwarin, and is distinctly Norman, as its earlier forms, Menilwarin and Mesnilwarin, prove. The second half of the name is Warin or Guarin, a once common font-name, introduced by the Normans into England; v. Warren (2) and Wareing. It is said that this name can be found spelt in no less than 131 different ways.

Robert de Meynwareing, co. Derby, 1273. A.

Thomas de Meynnegaryn, co. Norf., ibid.

1663. Bapt.—Ann, d. Allen Manwaring: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 218.

1669. Bapt.—Elisebeth, d. Doctor Manerring: ibid. p. 242.

London, 2, 2; Boston (U.S.), 2, 0; Philadelphia, 1, 0.

Mair, Maire.—Offic. 'the mayor,' the magistrate of the town. M.E. maire. v. Meyer.

'Salomon the sage
A sermon he made
For to amenden maires.'

Piers P. 1541-3.

Ricardus Mayre, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 111.

1677. Thomas Mayor and Martha Puckerin: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 207.

London, 2, 2; Philadelphia, 13, 3.

Major, Mager.—Bapt. 'the son of Malger' or 'Mauger.' The modern form is imitative. The font-name was fairly popular in the 13th century. Mauger is found as a single personal name in the Hundred Rolls (ii. 609, and again ii. 797). For other instances, v. Mauger.

Hugh fil. Mağri, co. Devon, 1273. A. Thomas fil. Mağri, co. Linc., ibid. Walter Mauger, co. Camb., ibid.

Mauger de la Neuland, C. R., 31 Hen. VI.

I find no evidence to prove that Major as a surname is the Latin major, i.e. mayor, a town magistrate (v. Mair). The present military major is modern from a surname point of view.

1561. Bapt.—Robert, s. John Maygor: St. Mary Aldermary, p. 54.

1577.—Alice, d. William Mager: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 19.

1742. Married—Robert Major and Eliz. Davis: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 17.

London, 13, 2; Philadelphia, 22, 15.

Makebliss.—Nick.

Julian Makeblise, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

Makeblithe.—Nick. A pretty nickname; cf. Makepeace and Makejoy. This surname does not seem to have descended to modern times, although found in three different parts of the country. Makepeace has fared better.

1597. William Makblythe, co. Warw.: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 224.

Makehate.—Nick. This seems to be the opposite of Makepeace, Makejoy, &c.

Alicia Makehayt, co. Bucks, 1273. A. William Makehayt, co. Oxf., ibid. John Makehey, co. Oxf., ibid.

Makejoy.—Nick. As pretty as Makepeace and Makeblithe. 'Make-joy,' Prompt. Parv.; 'joyñ or make-joy, gaudeo, exulto' (ibid.).

Maud Makejoy, c. 1300. M.

Makeman, Mackman.—? Bapt. 'the son of Maymond' (?), i.e. Magin-mond. Probably the k and ck represent the original g sound. As a Lincolnshire form this is the more likely. Other forms of the surname are Mayman, Maidman, and Maidment, q.v.

MDB. (Lincoln), 1, 2; New York, 0, 1.

Makepeace.—Nick. A pretty and gracious sobriquet, always to be remembered as the second name of Thackeray. It occurs early in Yorkshire, and has always maintained its existence, though it must be included among the rarer surnames; cf. Makebliss and Makejoy.

¹Joan Makepeace was the name given to the daughter of Edward II, when the long war with the Bruces was partly pacified by her marriage': Yonge, i. 112. Thomas Makpays, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 296.

1712. John Makepeace, rector of Quedgley, co. Glouc.: Rudder's Hist. Glouc. p. 613.

1752. — Ann, d. Jonathan Makepeace: St. Mary Aldemary (London), p. 132.

1786. Married—John McKee and Eliz. Makepeace, of Waltham Cross, Herts: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 393. London, 1.

Makin, Makinson, Makein, Making, Makings, Makins.—Bapt. 'the son of Matthew' (Fr. Maheu), from nick. May (v. May, Maycock, &c.), and dim. May-kin; cf. Wil-kin, Wat-kin. The g in Making and Makings is excrement, and the e in Makein intrusive. The nick. May is distinguished from the nick. Mat as being the offspring of Maheu, and not Matthew.

Henry Maykin, co. Camb., 1273. A. Mathew de Sutheworth, dictus, Maykyn, C. R., 20 Edw. III. pt. 1.

Maykyn de Sythwrt (sic), 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 271.

Johannes Maykeson (i.e. Maykinson): ibid. p. 216.

Makin Lappyng, Pat. Roll, 1 Hen. VII. pt. 1.

Maykina Parmunter. H.

This last is a feminine form.

1565. Married—Richard Makin and Alice Langden: St. Thomas the Apostle, p. 4.

1613. Married—Henry Jenkinson and Isabel Makinson: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, p. 39.

1753. — John Makings and Mary Scott: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 248.

The Manchester Dir. contains fifteen Makins and nine Makinsons.

Malbon, Mallabone, Mallebone, Mallabund.—? Local, 'of Malbanc'(?). As Malbon undoubtedly arose in Cheshire, it probably represents the old de Malbancs of that county. Ellen de Malbanc was second wife of Sir Robert de Stokeport, who was living in 1268 (East Cheshire, i. 337-8). Otherwise I cannot explain it. The corruptions into Mallabone, Mallabund, &c., are not singular; cf. Allibone for Alban. The d in Mallabund is excrement, as in Simmonds, or the provincialism gownd for gown. The corruptions seem to have increased as the name extended into the further counties of Stafford and Warwick. A family named Malbon resided near Mottram, co. Cheshire, for many generations.

Malin.—Bapt. 'the son of Malin'; v. Mallinson.

Malkin, Malkinson.—Bapt. 'the son of Matilda,' from dim. Malkin. 'Malkyne or Mawt, propr name (Molt, K., Mawde, W.), Matildis (Matilda)': Prompt. Parv. In the face of this clear statement it seems strange that Malkin should have been universally treated as the dim. of Mary. 'It was formerly a common diminutive of Mary' (Halliwell). I suspect Malkin represented Mary in the North of England, and Matilda in Norfolk and South-East England generally. At any rate, Maid Marian was also known as Malkin, and Marian, or more correctly Marion, is an unquestionable diminutive of Mary. Malkin is found early:

'Nor those prude yongemen
That loveth Malekyn.
A Litul soth Sermun, E.E.T.S.

'And Malkin, with hire distaf in hire hond.' Chaucer, C. T. 15391.

Hence a kitchen wench. 'The kitchen malkin pins Her richest lockram': Coriolanus, ii. 1. Burton is still more unkind. 'A filthy knave, a deformed quean, a crooked carcass, a maukin, a witch': Anat. of Melancholy, part iii. sect. 2, mem. 2, subsect. 3. Hence, too, malkin, a baker's clout to clean ovens with, or a scarecrow (v. Halliwell), on the same principle by which implements taking Jack's place took Jack's name; cf. boot-jack, or jack, a turnspit.

Johannes Malkynson, 1379: ibid. p. 12.

Matilda Dikwyemalkynson, vidua, i.e. Matilda, the wife of Dick, the son of Malkyn, widow: ibid. p. 42.

Willelmus Malkynson, ibid. p. 173.

Malkinson exists in Yorkshire, but it is rare; Malkin later on, as the name of a drab, having, like Parnall and Nan, lost caste. Nevertheless some of our Makinsons are doubtless thus originated; v. Makin.

1604. Bapt. — Joseph, s. Joshua Malkin: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 358.

Mallalieu, Mallalue.—Nick. A corruption of Melladew; v. Merrirew.

London, 2, 1; Manchester, 3, 0; Boston (U.S.), 3, 0.

Mallam; v. Malham.

Mallard.—Nick. 'the mallard,' i.e. the wild drake; cf. Wildgoose. 'Malarde, bryde, anas': Prompt. Parv. Probably absorbed in the course of generations by Mallet, q.v.

1580. John Malard, co. Hereford: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 94.

1638. Married — Ralph Beech and Marye Mallard: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 70.

Maltster.—Occup. 'the maltster.' The feminine terminative is common to these domestic employments; cf. Brewster, Baxter, Sempster or Simister, Kempster, 'Malstere or maltestere, brasiatrix, brasiator': Prompt. Parv. When men more frequently took their part in some of these avocations the feminine term was still retained. There is no Maltster in the Hundred Rolls (1273), but Maltmaker occurs. v. Malter.

Manchester.—Local, 'of Manchester.' We do not often find many representatives of our large cities. The tendency was to come to them, not to leave them. Hence many little spots are the fruitful parents of surnames.

Mander; v. Maunder.

Manderson.—Bapt. 'the son of Magnus.' A corruption of Magnusson. This surname comes from Shetland, where Manderson and Magnusson run side by side; v. Magnus. There need be no hesitation in accepting this solution. The corruption is of a most ordinary character.

1804. Married—William Manderson and Ann Maria Marsh: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 310.

London, 1; Philadelphia, 17.

Mandeville, Manvell, Manville.—Local, 'of Mandeville.' I quote from Lower: 'Goisfrid de Mandeville was a Domesday chieftenant in many counties. His descendants were the famous Earls of Essex, extinct in the 13th cent. From a younger branch probably sprang the famous traveller, Sir John M., in the 14th cent. In charters "de Magna Villa" and "de Mandaville." Magneville is near Valognes, in Normandy; and there are two places called Mandeville, one near Louviers, and another in the arrondissement of Bayeux.' Manvell is a manifest variant.

Mapleson.—Bapt. 'the son of Mabel.' The b is sharpened into p, as in Mapps, Mappin, or Maplet, all from the same name. But while it seems so natural and easy of solution, it must not be forgotten that Mapleson may be a modification of Mapleston, and thus have a local origin; cf. Kelson for Kelston, where the t is similarly elided. London, 3; Liverpool, 1; New York, 1.

Mapleston, Maplestone.—Local, 'of Mapleston,' probably for Mapleton.

Margrie.—Bapt. 'the son of Margaret,' popularly Margery, q.v.

Maries; v. Marison.

Marigold, Marygold.—?Nick. This surname seems to have had Staffordshire for its home.

John Marigold, minister of Cartmel, 1643 : Baines' Lanc. (Croston), p. 309.

Possibly the same clergyman is referred to in the following :

1643. 'Item, for charges and expenses upon divers Ministers (to witt), Mr. Fornace, Mr. Mariegould . . . which bestowed their paines in preaching with us when wee had no constant minister': Northenden Church, East Cheshire, i. 293.

This is confirmed by the fact that a John Marigold occurs as 'pastor of Waverton,' in Cheshire, in 1648. He seems to have died in 1662.

Marion, Maryon, Marrian.

—Bapt. 'the son of Mary,' from the dim. Mari-on, 'little Mary'; cf. Gibbon from Dick. Marion or Marian is now a separate name from Mary, as is Eliza from Elizabeth. The doublet Mary Ann helps to perpetuate the modern idea that Marian is a compound of Mary and Ann. It is ludicrous to read that 'Marian, more frequently written Marion, is not formed from Mary and Ann, as some French writers have supposed, but more probably from Mariamne, the wife of Herod, &c.': A Lytell Geste of Robin Hode, i. 342. This is 'out of the frying-pan into the fire.' Maid Marian was as often styled 'Malkin, the May Lady,' Malkin being the English dim. of Mary. Jamieson has unfortunately permitted the 'Mariamne' view a place in his dictionary.

Marison, Maris, Maries.—

Bapt. 'the son of Mary.' Mariot the dim. was almost universal,

Mary being rare; v. Marriott. Maris might seem to be one of the many early forms of Marsh (q.v.), but it seems more natural to place it here. However, v. Marriss.

Marmaduke.—Bapt. 'the son of Marmaduke'; somewhat rare in the surname period. Nevertheless it was popular in Yorkshire, and made the pet nicks. Docket and Doka (now Duckett and Duke) favourites long enough for them to become surnames and attain immortality in our directories. Whether the full name ever reached surnominal honours so as to live into modern times I cannot say. I have not met with it.

It is interesting to notice that Martinson still lives, although it does not now appear in the London Directory.

1797. Married—Thomas Martinson and Sarah Burrows: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 169.

London, 243, 4, 0; MDB. (Lincoln), 34, 0, 2; (West Rid. Yorks), 8, 0, 1; New York, 600, 13, 0.

Martindale, Markendale, Martindell.—Local, 'of Martindale,' in co. Cumb. Markindale was an early corruption, as the reference below fully proves; v. Markendale.

1475. Katerina Martyngdale, co. York: W. 11, p. 98.

1845. Buried—Louis Martinet: Canterbury Cath. p. 158.
New York, 2.

Martland.—Local, 'of Markland,' a Lancashire variant of that county surname (v. Markland); cf. Martindale and Markendale.

Blackburn, 2; Manchester, 2.

Marton.—Local, 'of Marton.' Parishes in cos. Linc., Warwick, W. Rid. Yorks, and N. Rid. Yorks, besides several townships and chapelries in various counties. It is probable that Marton, as a surname, has gradually become lost in Martin, q.v.

London, 5; Philadelphia, 2; Boston (U.S.), 3.

Martyr, Marter.—(1) Nick. 'the martyr,' one who had obtained that sobriquet by suffering of some sort for his faith's sake. M.E. martir; A.S. martyr. (2) Nick. 'the martre,' the marten, a weasel. F. martre, a martin, Cotg.; so spelt by Caxton in Reynard the Fox (Skeat). This is the more likely origin, nicknames from animals being so common.

Marvellous.—Nick. 'the marvellous,' the wonderful. M.E. merveille, a wonder.

Robert le Mervyllous, 'clericus de Kesteven,' co. Linc., 1273. A.

Marvin, Mervin, Mirfin, Mervyn, Murfin.—Bapt. 'theson of Merfin' or 'Mervyn' (Yonge, ii. 154-6). The Brittany form of this famous name was Merlin. Miss Yonge says Mervyn is still in use in Wales as a font-name. The story of 'Mervyn Clytheroe' has made the name familiar to modern ears; cf. Dolphin, Turpin, or Halpin, the suffix in all three cases being -fin. The Yorkshire form of the surname to-day is Murfin or Mirfin, practically the same as Mirfyn in the 14th century.

Marygold; v. Marigold.

Maryon; v. Marion.

Mascall, Maskall, Maskell, Maskill.—Occup. 'the marshal' (q.v.). No doubt, as suggested by Mr. Lower, a corruption of Marscal. 'I believe that the Mascalls of Kent and Sussex were originally Marshalls. There is armorial evidence of this, and in a document of the 16th century I find the name written Marscal, which is about midway between Mareschal and Mascall': Patr. Brit. p. 218. There is no need to go back to Mareschal, as Marscal existed so early as the 13th century, and one of my instances belongs to co. Sussex.

Mashmaker.—Occup. One who steeped malt, or perhaps a maker of mash-vats. In any case, connected with the brewing trade. This curious name is found in the Saint Edmund's Gild, Bishop's Lynn, the ordinances of which are signed by 'Johannes Mashemaker' (English Gilds, p. 96); v. maschel and maschyn in Prompt Parv.

Mashrudder.—Nick, for one who steeped malt. 'Maschel, or rothyr, or maschscherel, remulus': Prompt. Parv. Mr. Way adds in a note, 'This term evidently implies the implement used for mashing or mixing the malt, to which, from resemblance in form, the name rudder is also given.' In Withal's little Dictionary, enlarged by W. Clerke, among the instruments of the brewhouse is given 'a rudder, or instrument to stir the meash-fatte with, motaculum.'

Massam; v. Masham.

Masser.—Occup. 'the mercer,' a Lanc. provincialism for mercer (Halliwell). In the registers of the Parish Church, Ulverston, N. Lanc., I have frequently seen in entries of the 17th and 18th centuries a man described as a 'mercier.'

1727. Bapt. — Susanna, d. Thomas Masser: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 169.

1744. Married — John Bowdery and Ann Massar: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 32.

Massey, Massie.—Local, 'of Masey.' A Norman surname that came over with William. Hamon Massie acquired Dunham, in co. Ches., and the patronymic spread rapidly. Mr. Lower points out several places in Normandy whence the name may have come, 'viz. Macé-sur-Orne, Macei in the arrondissement of Avranches, Marcei in that of Argentan, and Marcei, on the Broise, near the town of Avranches.'

Massingberd, Massingbird.—? — I can discover nothing satisfactory with regard to this name. I suspect it came at some fairly early period from the Low Countries. As Massingham (q.v.), however, is a parish in co. Norf., it may be that Massingberd was originally some spot called Massingbergh in co. Linc. Indeed Massingberd is in MDB. (co.

Lincoln), only I fear it is a misprint.

Masters, Masterson.—Nick. 'the master's son' (v. Master); cf. Taylorson, Clerkson, Smithson, Millerson. Considering the large number of early and later entries relating to this surname, it is curious that Masterson should be so rarely met with in the present generation in England. It flourishes, I find, in New York. But nomenclature is full of surprises of this kind.

Matchet; v. Madgett.

Mather.—Of this surname, so well known in co. Lanc., there seem to be two origins, one occupational, the other baptismal. But there is distinctly more evidence on behalf of the first. (1) Occup. 'the mather,' i.e. the mower; cf. Mawer, q.v., probably a general term for a husbandman. We still use math or after-math in poetry. Mr. J.

Paul Rylands, F.S.A., supplies me with my first two and most important references.

'16 August, 5 Hen. V. (1417). Writ to the Sheriff of Lancashire, commanding him to attach . . . Mathew le Madour, of Culcheth, husbandman; Ric. le Madour, of Culcheth, husbandman': Risley Charters, in the possession of Mr. Ireland Blackburne, of Hale.

Mathew, Mathews, Mathewson, Matthew, Matthews, Matthewson, Mathewes.—Bapt. 'the son of Mathew.' Found in French and English forms in large quantities in the early registers. The nicks, and dims. also are numerous, as the pages of this dictionary will show. The two chief nicks. were Mat (English) and May (French). Mathew or Mayheu was exceedingly popular with our forefathers. As Miss Yonge reminds us, some form or other of

'Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John Bless the bed I sleep upon' has existed for centuries.

Matthew, &c.; v. Mathew.

Matthewman.—Occur. 'the servant or labourer of Matthew'; cf. Perryman and Addyman. This is one of the most familiar representatives of this class of surname. Its origin as here deduced admits of no doubt. Perhaps the following instance will best exemplify the circumstances under which such a surname arose :

Matheus de Lofthous, firmarius, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 241.

Magota Mathewoman, 1379: ibid.

Here are Mathew himself, the farmer, William his hind, and Magot his kitchen wench. The two servants took their surname from the position they occupied to their master.

Maunder, Mander.—Occup.

(?) 'the maunder,' a maker of baskets called maunds. Lower says, 'Maunder, a beggar; O.E.

maund, to beg.' I strongly suspect my own interpretation to be the true one, although I have no early instances. 'Mawnd, skype, spor- tula': Prompt. Parv. Mr. Way, commenting on this word, adds,

'Caxton says, in the Book for Travellers, "Ghyselin the mande maker (corbillier) hath sold his vannes, his mandes (corbilles) or corffes.'" This is strong evidence.

In Ulverston registers to this day a maker of swills (i.e. baskets) is set down as a swiller, not a swill- maker.

of Maud. This is not the case. It is well represented as a local sur-

Mays, Mayes, Mayse.—Bapt.
'the son of May'; v. May (2).
This solution requires no proof.
As William became, through its nick, Will, patronymically Wills and Wilson, so Matthew, through its nick, May, became patronymic-ally Mays, or Mayes, or Mayse.

The only difference is that Will is still a nick, of William, while May as a nick, of Matthew (through the O.F. Mayheu) is forgotten. v.

Mayston, Maidstone.—Local,
'of Maidstone.' There can be no doubt that Mayston is a modern variant of Maidstone, a surname taken from the important town of that name in co. Kent. It is not likely that such a once familiar surname should leave but one representative in the London Directory. Besides, the corruption is a perfectly natural one, and found where we should expect to meet with it, viz. in London and the neighbourhood; v. Maidstone.

Mazerer, Mazeliner.—Occup.
'the mazerer' or 'mazeliner,' a manufacturer of mazers or maslins, a bowl or cup maker; so called because made of maple, which is a knotted wood. 'Masar of woode, masière, hanap': Palsgrave. 'Mazer, a broad standing-cup': New World of Words. Maslin was a dim., a cup of smaller size.

'They fet him first the swete win,

And mede eke in a maselin.'

These bowls are frequently mentioned in early wills and inventories.

ancestor of Chancellor Fell bequeathed (1542) 'A masser unto the Meadley.—Local; v. Medley.

Meadowcroft, Meddowcroft.—Local, 'of Meadowcroft';
v. Metcalf. The Lancashire Meadowcrofts appear to have originated at Meadowcroft, a small estate in the parish of Middleton, near Manchester.

Ricardus de Meducroft, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 54.

Willelmus Miducroft, 1379: ibid. p. 67.
Isabella Birch, of Meadowcroft, Middleton, 1615: Wills at Chester (1545-1620), p. 19.

The surname is found in the immediate neighbourhood in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Richard Meadowcroft, of Smethurst, 1581: Wills at Chester (1545-1620), p. 134.

Francis Meadowcroft, of Ratcliffe, 1616: ibid.

The above solution is amply proved by the following entries:

Nicholas de Meducroft, co. Lanc., 20 Edw. I. R.

Roger de Middleton, co. Lanc., ibid.
Adam de Rodces, co. Lanc., ibid.

Rhodes is close by Middleton. The three surnames occur together. The place is again referred to:

Meatyrd. — ? Nick. Until proved local this must be set down in the nickname class. Possibly from the straight back of the original possessor, or his occupation as a draper. The 'meteyard' was the old measuring-stick. 'Ye shall donounrighteousness in judgement, in meteyard, in weight, or in measure': Lev. xix. 35. A.S. metgeard, a measuring rod; M.E. meten, to measure; hence to mete out, to distribute impartially. Yard (M.E. yerde), a stick, a rod. 'Nothing take ye in the weye, neither yerde, ne scrippe, neither breed, ne money' (Wyclif, Luke ix. 3); v. Skeat, s.v. mete; cf. Shakespear, Wagstaff, &c.

Medler, Medlar.—(1) ? Nick. An obtrusive person, a busybody.

Nicholas de Medler, co. Salop, 1273. A.

(2) Local, 'of Medlar,' a township in the parish of Kirkham, co. Lanc.

Richard de Medler, co. Salop, Hen. III—Edw. I. K.

Query: as both these instances (1) and (2) occur in co. Salop, is not instance (1) a misprint or misreading for de Medler? Probably such is the case.

Jordanus atte Medpleck, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

Medwin.—Bapt. 'the son of Medwin.' One of the many personal names with suffix -win; cf. Godwin, Unwin, Baldwin, and Goldwin. 'In the unreformed calendar the feast of St. Medwyn stands for Jan. 1' (Lower). 'St. Mawdwen (or Modwin) was one of St. Patrick's Irish nuns; and another later Modwin, also Irish, came to England in 840, and educated Edith, daughter of King Ethelwolf, and founded an abbey at Polsworth' (Yonge, ii. 135).

Modewine, wife of Clement Cotton, C. R., 3 Edw. IV.

1787. Married—John Morris and Patty Medwin: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 399.
London, 4.

Mee, Mees, Meeson, Meese.—? Bapt. 'the son of Matthew' (?). This surname is quite beyond me. I can only suggest that as May, Makin, and Maycock (q.v.) represented Matthew, and as Makin and Maycock are generally found as Meakin and Meacock, so Mee may be also a variant of May. There is no doubt that Matthew, through the O.F. Mayheu, which was popularized in England, had many nick. forms, some of which are now obsolete. The favourite was May, and this would have variants. All this is corroborated by the existence of Mees and Meeson, corresponding to Mayes and Mayson, Circumstantial evidence, therefore, is entirely in favour of the above suggested solution.

Merridew, Melladew, Mel-lodew, Merriday.—? Bapt. 'the son of Meredith.' An early English corruption, also a well-recognized Irish form of the same. The corruptions of this North-English surname, besides those recorded above, are Malledew, Mallalieu, Mellody, and Mellodey, q.v. The following entries concerning the same individual are interesting as bearing on the point:

1596. Bapt.—Sybell, d. John Meredith: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 100.
1598. — Phillipe, s. John Meredaye: ibid. p. 101.
1599. — John, s. John Meredaye: ibid. p. 58.
Thomas Merydewe, 1379: P. T. Yorks.
Johannes Meridewe, 1379: ibid. p. 57.

The two entries following are very decisive:

1680. Bapt.—George, s. George and Elinor Merideth: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 291.
1682. — Mary, d. George and Elinor Meriday: ibid. p. 301.
1711. — John, son of John Merryday: ibid. ii. 60.

Merrifield, Merrefield, Merryfield.—(1) Local, 'of Merevale,' a parish near Atherstone, co. Leicester. A corruption; cf. Tubberfield for Tubberville; v. Merrifill, infra. (2) Local, 'of Merryfield,' probably for Maryfield. Mr. Lower (Patr. Brit. p. 223) says, 'The site of Salisbury Cathedral is so called in mediaeval documents, being a corruption of St. Mary's Field.' Other spots might easily be so called.

Merriman, Merryman.—Nick. 'the merry man,' one of a joyous, festive disposition. In proof of the familiarity of this sobriquet I may remind the reader of the dog's name in the Taming of the Shrew:

'Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds:
'Trash Merriman, the poor cur is emboss'd.'
Induction, Scene i.

Merriott; v. Meryett.

Merritt, Merrett.—Local, 'of Merriott,' a parish in co. Somerset. As Merrett it still lives in that shire; v. Meryett for early instances.

1753. Married—Robert Merritt and Jane Backhouse: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 245.

Merrycock.—Nick. 'merry fellow.' Cock, a pert, lively young lad; v. Cock.

Richard Merricocke, rector of Flordon, co. Norf., 1555: FF. v. 73.

Merryman.—Nick. 'the merry man'; v. Merriman.

Merrymouth.—Nick. 'a ready laugh,' one given to merriment.

John Merrymouth. V.
Richard Merrymouth. X.

Merryweather, Meryweather, Merewether, Merewea-ther.—Nick. 'merry weather'; a happy, genial, sunshiny fellow; a colloquial expression. Nothing to do with a wether sheep. Cf. Fairweather, used in exactly a similar sense, and still existing as a surname. 'Fayre, mery wedur or tyme (fayir as wedyr, K.), amenus': Prompt. Parv. 'Myry weder, or softe weder, malacia' (ibid.). Merry is here used in the sense of pleasant. Way adds a quotation from Vegetius, attributed to Trevisa, Roy. MS. 18 A. xii, where it is observed that wise warriors in olden times used to 'occupie theire foot menne in dedes of armes in the felde in mery wedire,' i.e. fair weather (v. Way's edit. Prompt. Parv.). As a surname it occurs, among some other fictitious characters, in one of the Coventry Mysteries, where mention is made of

'Bontyng the Brewster, and Sybyly Slynge, Megge Mery-wedyr, and Sabine Sprynge.'

Merton.—Local, 'of Merton,' parishes in cos. Oxford, Devon, Norfolk, and Surrey. This surname is a proof how names rise and fall. There is but one solitary representative in the London Directory. It was familiar in its day, and one Oxford college will for ever preserve it from obscurity. The first two instances probably refer to Marton in the W. Rid. Yorks:

London, 10; Oxford, 3; Philadelphia, 6.

Metcalf, Metcalfe, Medcalf, Medcalfe, Medcraft, Meadowcroft.—? Local. I feel assured the name is local, and that it is a modification of Medcroft or Medcraft (v. Craft and Croft, and cf. Calcraft and Calcroft), of which an instance still remains in the London Dir. Mead and meadow as double forms still exist. M.E. mede, a grass-field, so called because mowed (Skeat). Metcalf and Turnbull were great Yorkshire names. I have seen them side by side in Yorkshire records of 500 years ago. Horace Smith still keeps them in company:

'Mr. Metcalf ran off on meeting a cow, With pale Mr. Turnbull behind him.'

Mewett.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Matthew,' from nick. Mew (i.e. Mahew), dim. Mewot. (2) ? Nick; perhaps a dim. of Mew ('the mew'), q.v.

Richard Mewot, co. Hunts, 1273. A. 1804. Married—Geo. Mewitt and Mary Sturt: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 314. London, 1.

Mewze, Meuse.—? Local, 'of Meux' (?), a township in the parish of Waghen, E. Rid. Yorks. The evidence below seems to confirm this view:

William de Mewse, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 146.

John de Mewhes, 1379: ibid. p. 147.

These individuals are found on the borders of the East Riding.

Meyrick; v. Merrick.

Miall.—Bapt. 'the son of Michael'; v. Miell.

1798. Married—Thomas Young and Hannah Miall: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 182. London, 4.

Michael, Michaels, Michael-son.—Bapt. 'the son of Michael,' more commonly Mitchell, q.v.

Michael de Audewarp, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 73.

Sometimes, perhaps, a foundling name:

Micklewright.—Nick. 'the mickle wright,' i.e. the big wright.

Evidently a North-English or Border surname; cf. Meiklejohn.

1619. George Durye, fletcher, and Sibell Michaelwright: Marriage Lic. (London), p. 78.

1692. Married—Timothy Michelwright and Mary Brittain: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 212.

Manchester, 1.

Midday; v. Midnight.

Middle.—(1) Local, 'of Middle,' a parish in co. Salop, eight miles from Shrewsbury.

Richard le (de?) Midel, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

(2) Local, 'at the middle,' i.e. the middle house, field, farm, &c.

Middleditch.—Local, 'at the middle dike,' from residence thereby.

1590. Bapt. — Roberte, s. Richard Myddledithe: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 96.

1646. Elizabeth Middleditch: St. Mary Aldernary (London), p. 20.

1808. Married—William Middleditch and Ann Mills: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 394.

London, 1; New York, 2.

Middlehurst.—Local, 'at the middle hurst,' i.e. wood, from residence thereby; cf. Midwood. Both belong to the North.

1610. Alice Middlehurst, of Grappenhall: Wills at Chester, i. 135-6.

1615. John Middlehurst, of Latchford: ibid.

Liverpool, 2; Manchester, 1.

Middlemass, Middlemiss, Middlemist, Middlemost.—(1) Bapt. or nick. 'Michaelmas'; cf. Candlemas, Pentecost, Whitsunday, Christmas, Nowell, Saturday, &c., from the day or season whereon or wherein the child was born. The evidence in favour of this origin is sufficiently strong, although I suggest another interpretation infra. For one thing we find one undoubted instance:

1547. Shorman Myglemas: Churchwarden's Accounts, Ludlow (Camd. Soc., v. Index).

Michaelmas was commonly so pronounced. In the Treatise of Fishing with an Angle, in the St.

Alban's Book, the following are given as baits for roach in July, 'the not worme, and mathewes, and maggotes tyll Myghelmas': Sign. i. ii (v. Prompt. Parv. p. 331, n.). For further proof v. Mighill. From Miggelmas to Middlemas would be an easy transition. The final t in Middlemast and Middlemost would thus be excrement.

(a) Nick. or local, 'the middlemost,' i.e. the middle one in the family, or the middle house in a row of cottages, 'at the middlemost.' We find this somewhat uncouth superlative in Ezek. xlii. 5, 'the middlemost of the building.' Still earlier, c. 1450, we find it in some curious nursery lines upon the fingers (v. fingers, Halliwell), wherein the little finger is styled 'litylman,' and the longest 'longman.' 'Longman hat the mydilmast, for longest fynger hit is.'

1694. Married—Moses Pearepoint and Mary Midlemass: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 214.

1700. — Searles Middlemas and Elizabeth Court: Canterbury Cathedral, p. 69. London, 3, 2, 3, 0; West Riding Court Dir., 1, 0, 2, 0, 3; New York, 1, 1, 0, 0.

Middleton.—Local, 'of Middleton,' i.e. the middle town, or farmstead; v. Town. There are several dozen places, larger or smaller, scattered up and down England of this name.

1580. Christopher Middleton, co. Ches.: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 94.
London, 34; New York, 27.

Midgall.—Local, 'of Midghall,' some small spot near Preston, co. Lanc., which I have not as yet been able to identify.

Edward Midghall, of Goosnargh, 1662: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 195.
Anne Midghall, of Blackehale, widow, 1642: ibid.
Preston, 1.

Midgley, Midgely.—Local, 'of Midgley,' a village five miles from Halifax, W. Rid. Yorks. This surname has ramified strongly in the surrounding district. Under heading of 'Migelay' (i.e. township) occurs:

Ricardus de Migeslay, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 188.

Johannes Migeslay, 1379: ibid.

1505. Richard Midgley, of Dinkerley: Wills at Chester, i. 136.

1788. Married—Thomas Midgley and Sarah Price: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 10. London, 1, 0; West Rid. Court Dir., 20, 0; New York, 1, 0; Worcester (U.S.), 14, 3.

Midnight.—Nick. It is curious to note that both Midday and Midnight were early surnames.

Adam Midday, bailiff of Norwich, 1335: FF. iii. 98.

Roger Midday, bailiff of Norwich, 1348: ibid. p. 99.
Boston (U.S.), 1.

Midwinter.—Bapt. 'the son of Midwinter.' Christmas and Noel were in common use as names for children born at this season. Midwinter was a synonym. 'The sheriffs, by the custom of the city, do ride to several parts thereof every year, betwixt Michaelmas and Midwinter, that is Yoole' (Hist. and Ant. York, ii. 54). Robert of Gloucester says that the Conqueror purposed 'to midwinter at Gloucester, to Witesontid at Westminster, to Ester at Winchester.' Cf. Yool and Yoole.

Manchester, 3, 1; Philadelphia, 2, 0.

Miell, Mihell, Myhill.—Bapt. 'the son of Michael.' Mihell was a common form of this popular name, even when the proper orthography was preserved.

'At Michael's term had many a trial, Worse than the Dragon and St. Michael.' Hudibras, pt. iii. canto 2.

1626. Married—Thomas Yearly, of Sant Mihills in Cornhill: Reg. St. Dionis Barchurch (London), p. 22.

A castaway called, no doubt, after the patron saint of the parish, is thus entered in the baptisms of St. Michael, Cornhill:

1585. Joane Myhell, a founding: St. Antholin (London), p. 93.

1549. Bapt. — Richard, s. Mihill Cristen: ibid. p. 7.

— Married — Mihill Assherst and Christian Bowen: ibid.

1779. — James Kay and Priscilla Miell: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 301.

There are many corruptions of this surname, as for instance, Miall, Mayall, Mayell, q.v.

London, 3, 3, 1.

Mighill.—Bapt. 'the son of Michael,' popularly called Mighel, often softened to Miell, q.v. 'Mighell = Michael': Palsgrave. Mighill is very common in old writers.

'The sothfastenes and nothing hele,
That thou herdest of seynt Myghele.'
Cursor Mundi, Halliwell.

1598. Married—Mighell Axendall and Marye Wall: St. Mary Aldermay (London), p. 9.

1626. Francis Bevis and Margaret Mighell: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 173.

1789. Married — Philip Mighell and Sarah Bolton: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 21.

For further proof, v. Middlemass. Worcester (U.S.), 1.

Milbank, Millbank.—Local, 'of the mill-bank,' one who resided on the slope by the mill; v. Mill and Miller. Perhaps in some cases the 'meol-bank,' i.e. the sand-bank (?); v. Meals, and cf. the first entry following:

1621. Married — John Barker and Isabell Mealebanke: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 49.

1685. John Milbanke and Margaret Lane: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 209.

1804. Married — John Gardner and Eliz. Milbank: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 304.
London, 3, 1; New York, 5, 2.

Milburn, Milborn, Milbourn, Milbourne.—Local, 'of Milburn,' a chapelry in the parish of Kirkby Thore, co. Westm.; also two townships in co. Northumberland, in the parish of Ponteland. It is evidently to the latter we owe the surname with its variants.

Margaret de Milburn, co. Northumb., Hen. III-Edw. I. K.

Milestone.—Local, 'of Milston,' a parish two miles from Amesbury, co. Wilts. 'Milestone, from residence near one': Lower. History, I believe, has not recorded that milestones were in use in the 13th century.

Richard de Mildestane, co. Wilts, 1273. A. London, 2.

Milford.—Local, 'of Milford,' parishes in diocs. Winchester, York, and Southwell; also Milford Haven, in dioc. St. David's, Wales; also Long Melford, in dioc. Ely. In all cases probably the mill-ford, the mill by the ford; cf. Mulford.

Milksp, Milsop, Mellsop.

—Nick. 'the milksp,' a soft, effeminate kind of fellow.

'To wed a milksp, or a coward ape,' Chaucer, C. T. 13916.

Oddly enough this sobriquet continued as a surname till the middle of the last century, and as Milsop probably still lives.

Hugh Milkesop. R. 1.

Exactly three centuries after the instances in A. we find the name in the same district:

1572. James Edwards, of Reading, and Dionise Milkesopp, spinster, of St. Albans, Herts: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 53.

Later we find representatives in the metropolis:

1620. Buried—John, s. Thomas Milk-sopp: St. Thomas the Apostle (London), p. 111.

1621. Bapt.—Thomas, s. Thomas Melsopp: ibid. p. 45.

In the last century the family had contrived to get rid of the k.

1736. Bapt.—Mary, d. Robert Milsop: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, p. 225.

This curious and interesting surname still thrives in the United States as Mellsop.

Mill is now an extremely scarce surname, Mills having become the accepted form. This final s is common in monosyllabic local surnames; cf. Holmes, Sykes, Brooks, Lowndes, Knowles, &c.

London, 1; Philadelphia, 4.

Millage, Milledge.—Local, 'of Milwich,' a parish in co. Stafford (Lower).

1666. Matthias Melledge and Mary Ryal: Marriage Alleg. (Cant.), p. 122.

1690. Bapt.—William, s. William Millage: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 336.

London, 1, 1.

Millard.—Offic.; v. Millward.

Millbank; v. Milbank.

Millen.—Local, 'de Millen,' probably of Dutch origin. The bearer settled in London in the 16th century.

1583. Buried—Alexsander de Millen, stranger: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 198.

1584.—William, s. Alexsander Millen: ibid.

London, 5; New York, 13; Philadelphia, 6.

Miller.—Occup. 'the miller,' one who grinds corn, a 'milner'

(q.v.), a surname found in the records of every county in England.

John le Mellere, c. 1300. M.
Adam le Molendinator, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

Achard Molendinari, co. Hunts, ibid.
Wymund Molendinari, co. Soms., 20 Edw. I. R.

Molendinari is a very frequent entry in the Hundred Rolls (A.), but, oddly enough, no instance is given in English.

1572. George Miller, co. Warwick: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 54.
London, 198; New York, 1, 100.

Millerson.—Nick, 'the miller's son'; cf. Taylorson, Smithson, Wrightson, Hindson, and Herdson, but this class of names is distinctly small. Possibly Milson and Millson are so originated. The surname was still in existence in the last century.

William Milner, of Sowergate, in Ulverston, 1605: ibid.

The variants in the Ulverston parish church registers are Milner, Millerson, Milner, and Mellerson. All the entries relate to one family. One of the latest references is:

1727. Married — Thomas Millerson and Dorothy Gibson: Reg. Ulverston, p. 373.

Millett, Millet, Millot. — Bapt. 'the son of Mille,' (1) i.e. Miles, from dim. Mill-ot, or Mil-ot, or (2) perhaps from Mille, the nick. of Millicent, a popular girl's name in the 13th and 14th centuries, especially in Yorkshire. This again would become as dim. Mill-ot, or Mil-ot, just as in the same county Margaret gave us Magot and Magotson, and Matilda Tillot and Tillotson, the one from the nick. Magg, the other from the nick. Till. On the whole it is probable that Millicent is the parent.

Members of the same family are found thus entered:

John Mylote, co. Durham, temp. 1380. QOO. ii. 153.

William Melot, co. Durham, 1433: ibid.
Robert Millot, co. Durham, 1512: ibid.

1696. Married — William Millett and Beate Vodell: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 49.

London, 3, 0, 0; New York, 4, 6, 3.

Millhouse.—Local, 'at the mill-house,' the cottage where the miller lived, close beside the mill, or the body of the mill itself. 'Myllehowse, molendina, molendinum': Prompt. Parv.

John de Molendino, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

Millichamp, Millichap. — Local, 'of Millichamp,' seemingly a Norman name, like Beauchamp. Millichap is one more instance of the tendency of a surname to corrupt when it passes the border of the county of its original settlement.

1620. William Millichap, or Millechappe, or Millichamp, co. Salop: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 383.

1774. Married — Richard King and Mary Millchup: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 243.

1795. — Henry Draper and Ann Millcham: ibid. ii. 126.

MDb. (co. Salop), 3, 0; (co. Hereford), 0, 1.

Millikin, Milliken. — Bapt. 'the son of Milligan.' Looking at the large contingent of persons bearing this name in the States, it is safe to conclude that it is simply a sharpened form of the Irish Milligan. The only evidence of a personal name with the suffix -kin (as in Jenkin) is furnished below. But it is an isolated instance, and probably came from the Low Countries:

John Mulkyn, co. Suff., 1273. A.

The following entry, however, practically settles the question, being the halfway house between Milligan and Millikin:

1798. Married — John Chandler and Susanna Millican: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 189.

London, 2, 1; New York, 2, 18; Philadelphia, 4, 20.

Millington.—Local, 'of Millington.' There is a parish in co. York of this name. Millington has been an East Cheshire surname for centuries. This name arose from Millington, an estate near Bowdon, co. Ches. It has always kept itself in view in South Lanc. and on the Cheshire border.

Millman; v. Milman.

Millmaster. — Offic. 'the manager of a mill'; v. Millward.

'Mr. Andrew Millmaster, of the Old Jewry, died Aug. 23, 1630': Smith's Obituary.

Mills.—(1) Local, 'at the mill,' from residence thereby. There is a column of Mills in the London Directory. A large number of these are local in origin. The final s (probably genitive) is common to all monosyllabic local surnames; cf. Brooks, Briggs, Styles, Dykes, Holmes, &c. For instances, v. Mill and Miln.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Miles,' a once popular font-name, or 'the son of Millicent,' from the nick. Mille, or Milly; v. Milson.

Margery Mytys, co. Camb., 1273. A. 1645. Bapt. — Ann, d. Anthony Mills: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 161.

The name is so universal that modern instances are needless.

West Rid. Court Dir., 16; London, 144; New York, 14.

Millward, Millward, Millard.—Official, 'the mill-ward,' the keeper of the mill; M.E. melle, mulle, and mulne. As with millner even now, so mill then meant always a place for grinding corn; cf. Milman, Millmaster, and Wind-milward, q.v. Millard is a modified form.

Milner.—Occup. 'the milner,' the more correct form of miller, which has slipped the n; A.S. myln, a mill; Latin molina. Mulliner (London Directory) is probably a reminiscence of 'mulnere,' although it may be a corruption of Molineux.

Milnes; v. Miln.

Milsom.—Bapt. (1) 'the son of Miles'; (2) 'the son of Millicent' (v. Milson). (3) The change from Milson to Milsom finds many parallels; cf. Ransom for Ranson, or Hansom for Hanson.

1763. Married — William Milsom and Sarah Staples: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 110.

1773. — John Saunders and Eliz. Millsum: ibid. p. 231.

The more correct form is found in the same register:

1777. Married — John Millson and Hanna Hyatt: ibid. p. 278.

London, 4; New York, 1.

Milson, Millson.—(1) Local, 'of Milson,' a parish in co. Salop, near Cleobury-Mortimer. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Miles,' a popular font-name in the surname period. (3) Bapt. 'the son of Millicent' (q.v.), early modified into Milson, or from the nick. Milly, whence Millison. Of these three (1) has had little influence. The real contest lies between (2) and (3), and doubtless both have contributed their due share.

1601. Henry Myleson, of Sutton: Wills at Chester, i. 140.

1606. William Myleson: ibid.

Of distinct connexion with Millicent, we have the following:

Iveta Milsent, co. Camb., 1273. A. 1577. Bapt.—Mylson, d. Henrie Gwynnowe: Reg. St. Columb Major, p. 10.

1584. — Mylson, child to young Cocker: ibid. p. 12.

1601. — Mellison, d. David Fyne: ibid. p. 20.

Further proof of Millicent's relationship to this name is seen from several registers:

1701. Married — Thomas Millison and Sarah Bills: Canterbury Cathedral, p. 66.

London, 1, 1; Philadelphia, 3, 0; Boston (U.S.), 0, 1.

Milsted.—(1) Local, 'of Milstead,' a parish in co. Kent. (2) Local, 'of Minstead,' a parish in dioc. Winchester. The change from n to l is too common in the dictionary and directory to need illustration.

London, 3; New York, 1; Philadelphia, 1.

Milthorp, Milthorpe.—Local, (1) 'of Milnethorp,' a hamlet in the parish of Sandal Magna, near Wakefield, W. Rid. Yorks; cf. Mill and Miln; (2) a market-town in the parish of Heversham, co. Westm. The former seems to have been parent of the name.

Milton.—Local, 'of Milton.' About thirty parishes of this name occur in Crockford, representing England alone. Smaller spots bearing the same name must be common. The 'mill-town' would naturally be a frequent local sobriquet. Cf. Milford.

Minister, Minster.—Local, 'at the minster,' i.e. monastery; cf. Westminster. Not a minister, an attendant, as stated by Lower. Minister is imitative.

Thomas de Mynistre, Close Roll, 45 Hen. III.

Haldanus Minister, co. Norf., 1273. A. 1768. Married—Thomas Minister, co. Oxf., and Ellen Prichard: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 171.

London, 2, 0; MDB. (co. Norfolk), 1, 0; (co. Warwick), 0, 1; Philadelphia, 5, 10.

Minn, Minns.—Bapt. 'the son of Min.' There is some evidence in favour of an old personal name Min, which was probably a nick. Minnie is still used as a girl's pet name for Emmeline. The existence of Minson strongly favours this view. Further it must be remembered that Emmeline was a very popular girl-name in the hereditary surname period, and must have had a nick.

1595. Married—William Myne and Anne Phenny: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, p. 19.

Moggridge, Mockridge, Mugeridge, Mogrige.—Local, 'of Moggridge.' I cannot discover the spot; manifestly the suffix is -ridge. The curious tricks that can be played with the spelling of surnames is well exemplified by Lower, who states that he once saw Mugridge over a small shop in co. Sussex, while in the window 'Muggerages ginger-beer' was announced for sale.

Molineaux, Molineux, Molineux, Molyneux, Mollineux, Mullineux.—Local, 'de Molineaux.' Probably, like the noble family who trace from William the Conqueror, from Molineaux-sur-Seine, near Rouen. This name has ramified very strongly in co. Lanc., and is found in all classes of society, from the highest to the lowest. Six centuries have brought their troubles upon younger branches of the family.

(2) Local, 'of Mondaye.' A correspondent writes: 'Mondaye, a hill in the parish of Juaye, about six miles from Bayeux, is still extant, likewise the abbey. . . The hill was originally called Mont d'Aé: in the langue d'oïl Aē signifies water.' It is highly probable that Monday is in some cases local, but I have not any early instances to bring forward in evidence.

Moneypeny. — Local. One thing is very certain, this surname has nothing to do with money generally, nor a penny specifically.
Although now a recognized Scotch surname, it is early found on English soil. Lower says, 'that it is local is proved by the prefix de with which it is found in early records.' Unfortunately my instances are without any prefix.

Monkton, Monckton. — Local,
'of Monkton,' i.e. the monk's stead or farm. Parishes in various dioc.
are so called, viz. Ripon (2), York (1), Salisbury (2), Exeter (1), Canterbury (1), Bath and Wells (2), &c.

Montagu, Montague. — Local,
'of Montagu,' in Normandy. The Latinized form was 'de Monte Acuto,' whence the occasional Monctate. The 'Prior Montis
Acuti' is mentioned in the Hundred Rolls (ii. 125). The parish of Mont-acute, co. Somerset, took its name from the family. 'Drogo de Monte-Acuto, the great Domesday tenant, came over in the retinue of Robert Earl of Mortain, the Conqueror's half-brother': Collins, quoted by Lower.

Montgomery, Montgomerie,
Montomray. — Local, 'of Montgomerie,' near Lisieux, in Normandy. Of this great family, which gave name to the shire and town of Montgomery in Wales, Lower says, 'One of them, Roger de Montgomery, a kinsman of the Conqueror, accompanied him, and led the centre of his army at Hastings' (Patr. Brit. p. 228). It is more natural to refer back the surname to the Norman estate than to the county to which the family gave their name.

Monument, Mornement.—

? Local. Lower says, 'from residence at or near a monument.' I do not think this view satisfactory, and question its local application in the surname epoch. Perhaps it represents an early form (corrupted later on) of Monmouth. In this case the corruption would be, as usual, imitative.

Moorcock, Morcock.—Bapt. 'the son of Maurice,' from the nick. Mor (v. Morin), with the suffix -cock (v. Cock) as in Wilcock, &c. It may possibly be a nickname = Moorcock, the red grouse, but the first definition is more natural and according to rule. The fact that Mor-kin also existed (cf. Jenkin, Wilkin, &c.) is additional evidence. On the other hand, Moorhen (q.v.) also existed as a nickname. It is hard, after all, to say which is the true definition.—Since writing the above I have lighted on an entry in Kirby's Quest which settles the matter:

Morecock Chepman, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 264.

Moorcraft, Moorcroft,

Morecroft.—Local, 'at the moor-croft,' i.e. from residence at the enclosure, or croft, on the moor (v. Croft and Craft). With the variant Moorcraft, cf. Meadowcraft. Some small spot on the borders of Cheshire has given birth to a surname which still thrives in south Lancashire. But v. Marcroft.

Moorhen.—Nick, 'the moorhen,' seemingly the feminine of Moorcock, q.v. It maintained its existence till the 17th century.

Magota Morehen, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 54.

1627. Buried—Widdow Moorehen, one of the pensioners: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 189.

1752. Married—William Morehen and Mary Woolly: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 207.

I suspect this name is either extinct or lost in Morin.

Moorhouse, Morehouse.—Local, 'at the moor-house,' the cottage situate on the moor, a local name common to many places.

I had a Moorhouse in my parish (Ulverston), a farmstead still far separated from other abodes. It gave rise to a family of Moorhouses resident in the immediate district for centuries. Some of the many Yorkshire Moorhouses, or Morehouses, are doubtless sprung from Moorhouse, now increased to a hamlet in the parish of Hooton Pagnell, near Doncaster. Naturally we find this name predominant in the North.

Moorsom, Morson.—Bapt. 'the son of Morris.' From Morrison to Morson was a natural transition; cf. Morse for Morris. The m in Moorsom presents no difficulty, as the final -son was often corrupted to -som; cf. Ransom, Hansom, Sansom. Nevertheless Mr. Lower's suggestion that it is for Moorsham, a township in the parish of Skelton, N. Rid. Yorks, must not be overlooked. I see the Modern Domesday Book has one instance in the North Riding. This confirms Mr. Lower's view.

Mordaunt, Mordan.—Nick. 'the biter.' The legend has ever been that this is the origin of this Norman name. Mr. Lower quotes that 'Osbert le Mordaunt possessed Radwell, co. Bedford, by gift of his brother, who had received it from the Conqueror for services rendered' (Patr. Brit. p. 229).

Morel, Morell, Morrall, Morrell, Morrill.—(1) Nick. 'the morel,' dark-complexioned.

A once common name for a horse. 'Morel, horse, morellus': Prompt. Parv. Mr. Way in a note quotes, 'Morel: noir, tanné, tirant sur le brun': Roquefort. In the Towneley Mysteries, p. 9, 'Morelle' occurs as one of the steeds yoked to Cain's plough; cf. morel, a species of dark cherry.

Moreton.—Local, 'of Moreton,' i. e. the enclosure on the moor; cf. Morton.

Of course there are well-nigh endless places styled by this name, some of which have originated surnames.

Moreton, a township in the union of Congleton, co. Ches., seems to be the parent of the Lancashire and Cheshire Moretons.

Morewood; v. Moorwood.

Morey.—Local, 'at the moorhey,' from residence by the enclosure on the moor (v. Hey or Hay). This suffix -hay or -hey frequently slips the h and becomes -ey.

Morin, Moring, Morrin.—Bapt. 'the son of Maurice,' from nick, More, and dim. Mor-in; cf. Col-in, Rob-in. The name is a common one (always without prefix) in the Hundred Rolls, and the origin need not be doubted. There was evidently a nick, Mor or More, and the usual dims. Morin, Morcock, and Morkin were formed from it; v. Moorcock. The g in Moring is excrement, as in Jennings.

Morrow, Marrow.—Local, 'of the moor-row,' i.e. the cottages on the moor. Row is a common suffix to early local surnames. A. S. rauw, a row (Skeat); cf. Townsend. Lower says that Morrow is a corruption of Mac Murrough. This may be true in certain cases, but there is undoubtedly an English surname Morrow also which has to be explained. Neither must it be forgotten that there is a hamlet Morrow in the parish of Wisbeach, co. Cumb.

Morson.—Bapt.; v. Moor-som.

Mortan, Morten.—Local; v. Mortyn. Not to be confounded with Morton.

Mortiboy, Martiboy.—Local. This name has been placed in the roll of fame by Sir W. Besant and the late Mr. Rice in their story Readymoney Mortiboy. It is no fancy name, as the London Dir. proves. Manifestly its last syllable is Fr. bois (v. Boys or Boyce), a wood, as in Talboys. This is confirmed by the entry:

1700. Bapt.—Jane, d. John Morteboyes: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 389.
1702.—Rebecca, d. John Morteboys: ibid. ii. 8.

As I have found no earlier reference, I presume it is of fairly modern French extraction. I wonder where Sir W. Besant or Mr. Rice met it? Many of Charles Dickens' characters will be met with in this dictionary.

London, 2, 0; MDB. (co. Staff.), 0, 1.

Mortimer, Mortimore.—Local, 'de Mortimer,' Latinized in old rolls into de Mortuo Mari, i.e. Dead Sea. Lower says it was for this reason that the surname was supposed to have sprung from Crusading times. 'The castle and barony of Mortemer lie in the arrondissement of Neufchâtel in Normandy': Patr. Brit. p. 230.

Morton.—Local, 'of Morton,' i.e. the moor-ton, the farm or enclosure on the moor. This naturally has given birth to many place-names, and as a consequence surnames. There are places, large and small hamlets and parishes, styled Morton in cos. Derby, Lincoln (3), Nottingham, York (4), Worcester, Warwick, Durham (2), Hereford, Norfolk, Northampton, &c.

Moser, Mosser.—Local, 'of Mosser,' a chapelry in the parish of Brigham, co. Cumberland. It seems almost certain that this is the parent, as the surname is familiar to that and the neighbouring counties.

1590. John Moser: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 198.

The surname has ramified strongly in the United States.

London, 3, 0; MDB. (co. Westm.), 2, 0; New York, 39, 3.

Mosley; v. Moseley.

Moss.—(1) Local, 'at the moss,' from residence thereby. The name is too general to necessitate extracts from modern registers.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Moses,' from nick. Moyse or Mosse (for instances, v. Moyse). It is curious to find that the modern practice, whereby Jews settling in England change their surname Moses into Moss, is supported by the fact that six centuries ago Moss was the English nick. of Moses.

London, 78; West Riding Court Dir., 14; New York, 46.

Mossman.—(1) Bapt. 'the servant of Moss,' i.e. Moses (v. Moss, 2); cf. Matthewman, Wilman, Bartleman, &c. It is curious to notice that Mossman, as a modern surname, is commonest in Yorkshire, the county that has given us the largest number of surnames of this particular class. Moses was a popular font-name in the 13th and 14th centuries. (2) Local, 'the mossman,' one who lived on or close by a moss. I am obliged to suggest this, but doubt not (1) is the correct interpretation.

Mott, Motte, Mote, Moth.—(1) Local, 'at the moat.' M.E. mote, O.F. mote, a dike, an embankment; the same as modern Fr. motte, a mound; cf. also mothe, a little earthen fortress, Cotg.

(v. Skeat, s. v. moat, for full history of the word). All the above forms are found, without prefix, in the Hundred Rolls (1273); cf. French 'Delamotte.'

Saundrina de la Mote: Wardrobe Account, 21-23 Edw. III. 38/2.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Motte.' Undeniably some of our Motts, &c., are of fontal origin. Whether this Mott was a nick, of some familiar personal name or not I cannot at present say. I give instances of both (1) and (2) together, as I cannot separate them.

Mottershead, Mottershead.—Local, 'of Mottershead,' a spot in the township of Mottram St. Andrew, in the parish of Prestbury, co. Ches.

'A family of the name of Mottershead held lands in this township from an early period. . . . An ancient deed without date, and probably of the 12th or 13th century, says that "Edward, son of Gamyl, lord of Mottram, gave to William, his son and heir, all that land in Mottershead, in the vill of Mottram, . . . which John de Chellegh then held, from which place he was called William de Mottershead, and his descendants Mottershead of Mottram": East Ches. ii. 355.

Mountain, Mountain.—Local, 'at the mountain.' Not very common in England, as we have but few mountains to boast of. But Hill and Hills have made up for any deficiency, even if they sound more modest; cf. Fr. 'de la Montaigne.' No doubt in some cases this has been Anglicized to Mountain. Mr. Lower (Patr. Brit. p. 231) furnishes an instance of 'de Montaigne' settling as Mountain in co. Norfolk after the Edict of Nantes.

Murch.—Local, (1) 'at the march,' from residence thereby, i.e. the boundary line; v. March.
(2) 'At the marsh,' from residence thereby, i.e. the swamp; v. Marsh.
This variant seems to be of Westcountry parentage.

of Charlton-upon-Otmoor, co. Oxford; (2) 'of Morcott,' a parish in co. Rutland; (3) 'of Murcott,' a hamlet in the parishes of Long as the Moorcot, i.e. the cottage on the moor, no doubt arose in several places; cf. Moorhouse.

Murgatroyd, Murgitroyde.

—Local, 'of Mergret's royd,' i.e.
Margaret's clearing; v. Royd. So we read of Tom-rode, Willmot-rode, Smyth-rode (Whitaker's Craven, p. 199). The instance quoted below sets all doubt at rest as to the origin. This surname has ramified strongly in Yorkshire, the county of its birth.
Gilbert and Sullivan have immortalized the name, if it needed immortalizing; but it was a strong flight of fancy to place it so far from its true home.

however, that some spot in the West of England has given birth to a similar surname.

Holmes, Greaves, Brooks, Styles. A large number of the Myers in the London Directory are of German-Jewish descent, and have no connexion with the North-English Myers. M.E. mire and myre.

Nabb, Nabbs, Nabs.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Abel,' from the nick. Nabb, gen. Nabbs; cf. Nibbs from Isabella or Noll for Oliver. In the Alchemist (1610) Abel the tobacco-man is familiarly Nab.

'Six o' thy legs more will not do it, Nab.' Act. ii. sc. i.

(2) Local, 'at the nab,' from residence on a spot so called. Here nab is a variant of knap, the crown of a hill; v. Knapp. The Lancashire surname Nabb or Nabbs is undoubtedly of local origin.

Nale, Nail, Naile.—Local, 'atten ale,' i.e. at the ale-house, the final n of atten becoming the prefix of the name proper.

'And maken him gret festes at the nale.' Chaucer, C. T. 6931.

Cf. Nelmes, Noakes, &c. Nail was a natural modern variant.

Manchester, 7; Liverpool, 4.

Nance.—Local, 'of Nance.'

'An estate in the parish of Illogan, co. Cornwall, which was, not many generations ago, in the possession of the family' (Lower). For the meaning of this local term, v. Nanfan, and cf. Nancy in Lorraine, Nantes in Brittany, and Trenance in Cornwall.

Crockford, i; Cornwall Dir. (List of Farmers), 5.

Nanfan.—Local, 'of Nanfan.'

'A Cornish family of some distinction, which produced, among other worthies, John Nanfan, the first patron of Cardinal Wolsey, who had been his chaplain. The name is evidently local, probably from Nanfan in the parish of Cury' (Lower). Cf. such other Cornish names as Nancarrow, Nankivell, Nanjulian, Nankervis, Pennant, &c. The root is Celtic, nant, a valley; cf. Nantwich (co. Chester) and Nantglyn (co. Denbigh).

John Nanfane, C. R., 26 Hen. VI.

1660. Married—Bridgiss Nanfan and Katherine Hastings: St. Dionis Backchurch (London), p. 37.

Nangle.—Local, 'atten angle,' i.e. at the angle, the bend or corner; v. Angle. In this case, as in Nale and Nail, the initial is borrowed from the prefix. The name is Latinized into 'de angulo,' or 'in angulo,' in the Hundred Rolls; cf. Nash, Nelmcs, &c.

John de Angulo, co. Norf., 1273. A. Symon in Angulo, co. Linc., ibid. 1571. Peter Nangle (Dublin): Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 49. London, 2; Worcester, 1; Boston (U.S.), 4.

Nanson.—Bapt. 'the son of Ann,' from nick. Nan; cf. Noll, Nabb, Nibb. Nan later on became Nanny and Nancy. The French turned it into the diminutives Nanette and Nanon. Even Ann Boleyn was 'Nan.' James Harrison, a priest, when the proclamation was read forbidding the people to call Catherine of Arragon Queen, was accused of saying, 'Queen Catherine was Queen, and Nan Boleyn was not Queen': v. Dict. Nat. Biog. ix. 299. Nan gave us nan-pie for mag-pie, the phrase 'As nice as a nanny-hen,' i.e. very affected, and 'Miss Nancy,' an effeminate man (v. Halliwell). But Nan and Nanny fell into disrepute, like Parnall and Jill. A nanny-house was well known to the dissolute of both sexes in the 16th century. In the ballad, 'The Two Angrie Women of Abington,' Nan Lawson is a wanton; indeed, in the 17th century she generally appears in the roistering songs in anything but a virtuous light. Respectable people, still liking the name, changed it to Nancy, and in that form it still lives among the peasantry.

Robertus Nanson, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 123. Benedictus Nanson, 1379: ibid. p. 232. Nicholaus Nanson, 1379: ibid. p. 272.

Our Nansons, of course, have no connexion with Nan in her degraded days. They belong to Nan in her early youth, before she became tainted with the world.

Naper, Napier, Napper, Napery.—Offic. 'the naper,' 'napier,' or 'napper,' from O.F. nape, a cloth; Fr. nappe, a tablecloth. Dim. nap-kin. 'Napet or napekyn': Prompt. Parv. 'The over nape schall double be layde': The Boke of Curtasye. Thus the naper or napier had charge of the table-linen; whence also the form 'de la naperye,' corresponding to 'de la paneterie,' 'de le euerie,' 'de le butterye,' &c. With the intrusive i in Napier, cf. the y in Sawyer (Sawer), Bowyer (Bower), or lawyer for lawer.

Nash.—Local, 'atten ash' (at the ash), from residence beside an ash-tree. The final n in the prefix became the initial of the name proper; v. Noakes and Nalder for similar tree instances. M.E. asch, esche. 'Esche, tre, fraxinus': Prompt. Parv. Esh is still popular for ash in Furness, North Lanc. This surname is familiar to all the English-speaking world.

Neave.—(1) Nick. 'the neve'; v. Neave. A variant. (2) Occup. 'the knave,' a lad, a servant. The older meaning of knave is not disreputable. The Yorkshire Poll Tax (1379) has many instances to prove its purely occupative character; cf. Napton for Knapton.

Johannes Jakkesknave, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 268. Nicholas Gaytknave, 1379: ibid. p. 271. Thomas Wyllknave, 1379: ibid. p. 269. London, 1; New York, 1.

Naylar, Nayler, Naylor.—Occup. 'the nailer,' a maker of nails. In the North of England, where the occupation is early found, the surname has taken the almost universal form of Naylor, following on the lines of Taylor.

John le Naylere, co. Northumb., 20 Edw. I. R. Stephen le Naylere, London. X. Johannes Nayler, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 17. Willelmus Naylor, 1379: ibid. p. 272. Johannes Strenger, nayler, 1379: ibid. p. 172. Thomas Pope, nayler, 1379: ibid. p. 17.

1565. Married—Robert Nayler and Margaret Larke: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 2.

1603. Bapt.—William, s. Wylfrecan Naylor: ibid. iv. 75.

1744. Married—John Hicks and Sarah Naylor: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 41.

But Naylor was the general form till the middle of the last century.

Nead, Neads, Need, Needes, Needs.—Bapt. 'the son of Eade' or 'Eede' (v. Edes, Eades, and Ede); nick. Nead, Need; gen. Needs, or Neads, or Needes; cf. Neddy, Nibbs, Nopps, Nabbs, &c. Although I have no actual proof, I am confident that this is the derivation of the surname. Ede or Eade was one of the most popular font-names in the hereditary surname period. My first two instances are strongly confirmatory of this view:

1678. Bapt.—Mary, d. Richard Nede: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 281.

1681. Married—William Smith and Barbara Nedes: ibid. iii. 189.

1720. — Charles Smith and Rachael Needs: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 301.

1747. Bapt.—Susannah, d. William Need: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 283.

1780. Married—William Need and Mary Long: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 311. London, o, o, 1, 4, 1; Philadelphia, i, 3, o, 2.

Neagle.—? Local, 'atten eagle,' i.e. at the eagle, a sign-name with initial N borrowed from the prefix (v. Roebuck for other instances of sign-names); cf. Nelmes, Nash, Nangle, &c.

1673-4. John Falcon and Susanna Neagel: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 109.

1679. Martin Neagle, in the Rebecca, for Virginia: Hotten's Lists of Emigrants, p. 39.

1762. Married—George Holland and Eliz. Neagle: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 110. London, 2; Philadelphia, 3.

Neal, Neale, &c.; v. Neil.

Neame, Neames.—Nick. 'the uncle' (O.E. neme), gen. Neames; cf. Neaves, Watmough, Bairnfather, Cousin, &c. Names of relationship will be found scattered in considerable numbers over this dictionary. v. also Uncle.

'In eyvll tyme thou dedyst hym wronge, He ys my neme.' Halliwell.

'And angels did him gret honoure, Lo! childe, he seid, this is thy neme.' Ibid.

Neatherd, Nothard, Nut-ter (?).—Occup. 'the neat-herd,' a tender of cattle; cf. Coward, Oxnard, Shepherd, Calvert, the suffix of all of which is -herd. M.E. neet, Icel. naut, cattle. Every variety of form is found in Yorkshire records. I will simply quote the Poll Tax.

Cecilia Neawterd, 1379: ibid. p. 160.

Adam Netehtird, 1379: ibid. p. 301.

I cannot find any modern representatives of these forms, saving one Nothard in the London Directory. I doubt not the present dress is Nutter through an intermediate stage Nuttard or Nuttred. Then the final d was dropped, and thus as Nutter this interesting surname still maintains a respectable appearance in our larger directories.

London, o, i, 17; Boston (U.S.), o, o, 31.

Neave, Neaf, Neaves, Neeve, Neeves, Neef.—Nick. 'the nephew'; O.F. le neve. 'Neve, sonys sone, nepos.' 'Neve, broderys sone, nephts': Prompt. Parv. Neve also acquired a secondary meaning, of waster or self-indulgent man, exactly as nepos did in Latin. 'Neve, neverthryfte or wastour, nepos': Prompt. Parv.

Neaverson; v. Nevin.

Need, Needs; v. Nead.

Needham.—Local, (1) 'of Needham,' a parish in co. Norfolk; (2) a market-town in co. Suffolk; (3) of Needham, an estate in co. Derby, from which place Earl Kilmorey's family took their name (Lower). The surname is familiar both in cos. Lanc. and Derby, especially the first, and in that portion which is adjacent to the Derbyshire border.

1667. Bapt.—William, s. William Needler: ibid. i. 230.

There must be present instances, but oddly enough I cannot find any. There is, however, an American variant Kneedler (q.v.).

Neep; v. Neap.

Neewe(s); v. Neave.

Negus.—? Local. Doubtless from some local name ending in -house; cf. Kirkus, Loftus, Bacchus, &c. The beverage so named took its title from Colonel Francis Negus, who 'mixed' it in Queen Anne's reign; v. Life of Dryden (Malone), p. 414. London, 4, 0; New York, 0, 2; Boston (U.S.), 0, 1.

Neil, Neild, Neill, Neal, Neale, Neall, Nell, Neilson, Nelson, Nelson, Niell, Nielson.—Bapt. 'the son of Neil.' For a full history of this personal name, common to all Northern Europe, v. Yonge, ii. 60-62. It is found in every possible guise in English rolls, and although Nell and Nelson must in many cases spring from Ellen or Eleanor, there can be no doubt that in general they are descendants of Neil. For instance, we find in Settle the following householders:

Nell de Hege, Elias Neleson, and Robert Nellson, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 273.

Probably all these were closely related. The excrescent d in Neild seems peculiar to the North of England. There is no Neild in the London, while ten appear in the Manchester Directory.

Nend, Nind.—Local, 'atten end,' i.e. at the end, one who resided at the end of a row of cottages, or the end of the lane, or wood, or town; v. Ind and Townsend. Nend or Nind is formed by taking as its initial the final n of the prefix atten; v. Noakes or Nash.

London, 3, 0; New York, 5, 1; Philadelphia, 2, 0.

Nethercliff.—Local, 'at the nether cliff,' i.e. at the lower cliff. The final t is an excrescence.

1605. Bapt.—Samuell, s. John Nethercleve: Reg. Kensington Parish, p. 15.

1742. Married—John Nethercliff and Jane Barnett: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 17.

London, 2.

Nethercote, Nethercott, Nethicott.—Local, 'of Nethercote,' a village in co. Northampton.

The American Nethicott is a manifest modification of the name. The original meaning was 'the nether cot' or cottage.

1574. Buried—Eliz. Nethercott: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iv. 16.

Netmaker.—Occup. 'the mat-maker'; not a maker of nets. Originally 'nat maker,' i.e. a maker of mats; Fr. natte. 'Natte or matte, matta, storium': Prompt. Parv. 'A natte maker, storiator': Cath.

Ang. 'Nat maker, natier': Palsg. 'In the curious poem entitled "The Pilgrimage to Jerusalem," . . . one of the characters introduced is the "natte maker," who holds long discourse with the Pilgrim' (v. Way's note on natte, Prompt. Parv. p. 351). In spite of all this the surname may mean the net-maker.

Isabella Nettemaker, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 26.

1603. Married—Lawrence Netmaker and Elizabeth Rice: St. Mary Aldermay (London), p. 10.

1621. Buried—Robert Netmaker, an old man: St. Antholin (London), p. 56.

1625. — Ann Netmaker: ibid. p. 59.

1683. Married—Sackvill Nettmaker and Ann Harford: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 148.

I have many more instances. It seems strange that I should not be able to light upon any in the directories of to-day.

Netter.—? Occup. 'the netter,' a maker of nets (?). Perhaps one who netted fish.

Johannes Netter, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 209.

London, 1; Philadelphia, 3; New York, 5.

Nettlefield, Nettelfield.—Local, 'of the nettle-field,' from residence thereby. I fail to identify the locality, but it would be a common local term.

1662-3. James Round and Eliz. Bishopp; alleged by Ric. Nettlefeld: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 65.

London, 3.

Nettleship.—Local, 'of Nettleshope' (?). There can be little doubt as to the accuracy of this definition. The suffix (v. Hope) is common to place-names in North England, and in some instances has become -ship, as applied to surnames which owe their parentage to them. I have seen Blenkinsopp spelt Blenkinship; cf. Winship. Nettleship is a Yorkshire name, and seems to have arisen in the neighbourhood of Tickhell, on the borders of Notts.

Nevin, Nevins, Nevinson, Nevison, Niven, Nivens, Nivison, Neaverson.—Bapt, 'the son of Niven,' or Nevin. I find no clue in the 13th and 14th century records. 'This series points to an early but forgotten personal name' (Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 236).

But for the existence of Nevin and Nevens I should at once assume that Nevinson and Nevison were Neve-son (v. Neave), i.e. Nephew-son, the intrusive n in the former being extremely common in such forms. Neaverson presents no difficulty. Nevinson was bound to become Nevison, and of this Neaverson is but a variant; cf. Pattinson and Patterson, or Cattinson and Catterson. The two following entries seem oddly enough to concern the same couple:

1635. Married—Robert Sharpe and Jane Nevison: St. Antholin (London), p. 69.

1637. — Robert Sharpe and Jane Nevinson: ibid. p. 70.

The following reference probably dates about the first year of Henry VI:

1602. Richard Nevinson, co. Kent: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 258.

My next entry denotes the change mentioned above as a natural one:

1728. Buried—John Nevison: St. Thomas the Apostle (London), p. 15.

Nevinson as a variant was inevitable:

1757. Married—John Park and Susanna Nevison.

The same changes are rung upon the Yorkshire Pattinsons, Pattersons, and Pattisons from the once familiar North-English Patrick.

Newbart, Newbert.—Local, 'of Newbold,' q.v. These variants seem to be peculiar to co. Notts.

MDB. (co. Notts), 2, 2.

Newberry, -bery; v. Newbury.

Newbiggin, Newbeggin,

Newbegin.—Local, 'of Newbeggin.' Two parishes, one in the dioc. of Carlisle and one in the dioc. of Newcastle, and many little farmsteads, &c., go by this name; = new building; cf. Lowland Scotch and North English big, to build; v. Halliwell. There is also a township called Newbiggin in the parish of Middleton-in-Teesdale, co. Durham; also a township in the parish of Shotley, co. Northumberland; also a township in N. Rid. Yorks.

Newbold, Newbald, New-

bolt, Newbould, Newbould.—

Local, 'of Newbold,' i.e. the new dwelling. A.S. bold, a house, a dwelling (v. build, Skeat). Naturally many places bear this name. There are parishes in cos. Warwick, Worcester, and Leicester, also hamlets in cos. Leicester, Derby, Northants, and Warwick. Newbald represents Newbald, a parish in the E. Rid. of Yorks, near Market Weighton; cf. Newbiggin.

Newbury, Newberry, Newbery.—Local, 'of Newbury,' a town in co. Berks. Also 'of Newborough,' a parish in co. Northants, five miles from Peterborough. Also a township in parish of Coxwold, N. Rid. Yorks. All these places no doubt contributed their share to swell the number of Newburys, Newberrys, and Newberys in our directories. For similar changes rung on the suffix, v. Oxberry.

Newhouse.—Local, 'at the new house,' from residence at a house so called. Many small spots go by this name up and down the country; cf. Newton, Newby, Newbiggin, and Newham, which are strictly parallel cases, only in most cases of older origin. The family of Newhouse, however, are evidently sprung from co. York.

Newland, Newlands.—(1) Local, 'of Newland,' parishes in co. Worc. and Glouc.; also townships in the parish of Ulverston, co. Lanc., and of Drax, W. Rid. Yorks. (2) 'Of Newlands,' a township in the parish of Bywell St. Peter, co. Northumberland; also a chapelry in the parish of Crosthwaite, co. Cumb. But from my first instances it is manifest that the chief parentage must be allowed to land reclaimed from the great fen district.

Newsam, Newsom, Newsome, Newsman, Newsum, Newsholme.—Local, (1) 'of Newsome,' a village near Huddersfield;

(2) 'of Newsholm,' a township in the parish of Gisburne, near Clitheroe, W. Rid. Yorks. Newsman is a curious modern corruption. It occurs in the Sheffield Directory. Alongside it is found the more correct Newsome. It is needless to say that Newsham, q.v., is inextricably mixed up with the above.

Newsham.—Local, 'of Newsham.' Townships in the parishes of Wressell, E. Rid. Yorks; Kirby Wisk, N. Rid. Yorks; Kirby Ravensworth, N. Rid. Yorks; Kirkham, co. Lanc.; and Eaglescliffe, co. Durham. Many of the surnames which owe their parentage to these places are mixed up with Newsam, q.v.

In the Index to the Register of St. George, Mayfair, the compiler has placed these names under one heading, as 'Newsham or Newsome.' In reality they ought to have been separated.

Newsom(e; v. Newsam.

Newsom.—Local, 'of Newsome'; v. Newsam. This is the obvious origin; v. Ransom for Ranson, or Sansom for Samson. It is a very natural corruption. The following entry is of considerable assistance:

1641. Married—Peter Newsam and Bridgett Jeffes: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 73.

This denotes the first change from Newsam to Newsan. Newsom was then inevitable.

1682. Married—John Jones and Eliz. Newsom: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 198.

1720. Buried—Dorothy Newsom, from Mr. Lockyer's, pullterer: St. Dionis Backchurch (London), p. 290.

1777. — William Newsom and Rachel Shaw: ibid. p. 273.

London, 11; Liverpool, 1; Philadelphia, 4.

Newstead.—Local, 'of Newstead,' co. Notts, where the famous abbey was founded. But there are also places in cos. Lincoln and Northumberland that bear this name. With Newstead, 'the new holding' (v. Stead), cf. Newham, Newhouse, Newton, &c.

1616. Christopher Newstead, co. Linc.: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 356.

Niche.—Local, 'at the niche,' i.e. nook, the recess. This seems an early instance and worth recording.

Simon atte Nych, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III.: Kirby's Quest, p. 105.

Nicholas.—Bapt. 'the son of Nicholas.' This once popular font-name is the parent of a very large family; v. Cole, Collin, Nicklin, Nix, Nixon, &c. A large list of variants is given under Nicholes.

Nicholes, Nicholl, Nicholls, Nichols, Nicholson, Nickalls, Nickels, Nickolds, Nickoll, Nickolls, Nickols, Nicol, Nicole, Nicoll, Nicolle, Nicols, Nicolson, Nickoles.—Bapt. 'the son of Nicholas,' from Nichol or Nicol, the nick.; v. Nicholas. Nichol always held a fair place in popular favour, as our directories of to-day amply prove. But Collin (q.v.) was probably the greater favourite.

Nicholets, Nicholet.—Bapt. 'the son of Nicholas,' from dim. Nichol-et; cf. Collett. There is no doubt that Collett was the favourite. Nicholet made little headway. Nicklet is an obvious modification, and has managed to cross the Atlantic.

Nickerson.—Bapt. 'the son of Nicholas,' a corruption of Nicholson (v. Nicholes); cf. Patterson, Catterson. The following entry shows the preliminary step towards the corruption:

1759. Married — John Nickelson and Mary Knapton: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 85.

London, 3; Philadelphia, 13.

Nickinson, Nickisson. — Bapt. 'the son of Nicholas.' Nickinson is probably a corruption of Nicklinson (v. next article) and Nickisson an extension of Nickson (v. Nix).

London, 2, 1.

Nicklin, Nickling, Nicklinson.—Bapt. 'the son of Nicholas,' from nick. Nicol, dim. Nicolin. Thomas Nycklyn (also written Nyclys, i.e. Nicholls) was Mayor of Coventry in 1575 (Coventry Mysteries, p. 129). The g in Nickling is excrement, as in Jennings and hundreds of other cases. With the dim. Nicol-in, cf. violin, a little viol.

Nihill.—Bapt. 'the son of Nigel,' or Niel, or Neil, q.v. Possibly the h is a memory of the g in Nigel.

1565. Buried—John Nihell: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 118.

1796. Married—Matthew Nihill and Mary Poard: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 152.
Crockford, 2; Philadelphia, 2.

Nind.—Local, 'atten end'; v. Ind and Nend.

Ninepence.—Nick. 'Ninepence'; cf. Twelpence, Fourpence, and Fivpence. Possibly the sobriquet of some banker or money-lender. Of Thomas à Becket we read: 'He was sent to the hall of Richer of L'Aigle, his father's friend, to learn courtly behaviour, and to the office of the wealthy Osbert Eightpenny to be taught business': Hist. England, by F. York Powell (Rivington, 1885), p. 92. We still hear lawyers called 'old six-and-eightpenny.'

I need scarcely say the surname is extinct, but it is clear that it lasted for several generations.

Nisbet, Nisbett; v. Nesbit.

Niven(s).—Bapt.; v. Nevin.

Nix, Nixon.—Bapt. 'the son of Nicholas,' nick. Nick, with patronymic s Nicks, whence Nix. Nixon, of course, is Nickson; cf. Dixon, Jaxon, Baxter.

London, 8, 28; Oxford, 5, 1; Philadelphia, 0, 82.

Noad; v. Nodes.

Noakes, Noke, Nokes, Nock.

Noack, Nocke.—Local, 'atten oak,' from residence beside the oak-tree. M.E. oke. As with Nalder and Nash, the final n in the prefix atten (=at the) becomes the initial of the name proper (v. Oak). Nokes and Noakes merely represent a cluster of oak-trees.

Nobbs, Nopps, Nobbe.—

Bapt. 'the son of Robert,' from nick. Hob, familiarly Nob. Names beginning with vowels or the aspirate h were commonly nicked with prefix N; cf. Nab (Abel), Nib (Isabel), Numph (Humphry), Noll (Oliver); v. Curiosities of Puritan Nomenclature, pp. 89, 90. As regards the change from Nobbs to Nopps, cf. Ropps for Robbs, Hopps for Hobbs, Hopkins for Hobkins, &c. To 'hob and nob,' to pledge a health by touching glasses. To 'hob-nob,' to associate closely. Perhaps the explanation lies in the fact that both were recognized nicknames of the same name, Robert.

Noble.—Nick. 'the noble,' excellent, illustrious. This complimentary sobriquet was not allowed to die out by the fortunate possessors, and they have bred a large progeny.

Noblet, Noblett, Noblit.—

Bapt. 'the son of Robert,' from nick. Hob, changed to Nob (v. Nobbs), and dim. Nob-elot. In the same way Hob took the diminutive -elot and became Hobelot. Nob would similarly become Nobelot; cf. Niblett and Hewlett.

Nobody.—?—. This curious surname occurs in the 17th century; cf. Peabody, Truebody, &c.

1618. Bapt.—John and Joseph, sons of Valentine Nobodye: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, p. 82.

There is no evidence of these being foundlings, although the date of the baptism is February 4, which is somewhat near St. Valentine's day.

Noek(e).—Local, 'at the oak'; v. Noakes.

Nodder.—Nick. 'the sleepy.' There seems to be no escape from the conclusion that this well-known Yorkshire patronymic was a nickname for one of sleepy or apathetic habits; one who nodded. I have tried to find an occupative origin, but have hitherto failed.

Noel.—Bapt. 'the son of Noel,' i.e. Christmas Day, Dies Natalis, reduced in French to Noël. Still given occasionally to children born on this great feast; cf. Christmas, Tiffany, Pascal, Pentecost, Midwinter, &c. A famous old carol still preserves the word, and Halliwell quotes:

'Therefore let us alle syng nowelle,
 Nowelle! Nowelle! Nowelle! Nowelle!
 And Cryst save mery Ynglond.'

v. Nowell.

Noelson, Knowlson.—Bapt. 'the son of Noel' (q.v.). Alexander Nouelson, co. Northumberland, Pardons Roll, 6 Ric. II. The surname evidently had a precarious existence. It might seem that Nolson was 'the son of Noll' (i.e. Oliver), but I do not find traces of that nick. further back than the 17th century.

Nornin(g)ton; v. Normanton.

Norrington.—Local, 'of Northampton' (?). There can be little doubt that this is the true etymology. The early forms of the surname were Northampton, Northamton, and Norhamton, and this would soon become Norrington. There is no Northampton in our directories, and yet the surname was common in the 13th century. Therefore we must look for it in some corrupted form. Norrington meets every difficulty.

Notman, Nutman, Nuttman.—(1) Occup. 'the nutman,' a dealer in nuts. M.E. note and nut, a nut. (2) Occup. 'the servant of Note' (Cnut or Canute); v. Nott (2). This is the more probable origin, belonging as it does to a special class of surnames, of which Matthewman and Addyman (q.v.) are the most familiar examples. Thus Matthewman means Matthew's man-servant, and Noteman means Note's manservant. Nevertheless (1) and (2) are open for selection.

Nott (2), Notson, Notts, Nutt, Nutson, Nuts, Nute.—Bapt. 'the son of Cnut' (Canute), found in the 13th century as Note. The diminutive Nutkins and the patronymic Notson clearly establish the fontal origin of this little batch of surnames. There are two Cnuts in Domesday, one in co. York, the other in co. Derby; cf. Knutsford, a village in co. Ches.

Nottage, Nottidge.—? Nick. 'the nut-hatch.' Halliwell quotes: 'Nothagge, a byrde, jaye,' Palsgrave; 'Fidecula, a nuthage,' Vocab. Rawl. MS.; 'The nuthake with her notes newe,' The Squire of Low Degree, 55. Cf. Jay, Nightingale, Sparrow, Pidgeon, Woodcock, &c. 'Nothak, byrde, picus?' Prompt. Parv. The meaning is nut-hack, i.e. a nut-cracker. Should this derivation be deemed unsatisfactory (although the corruption into Nottage is a natural one), a local origin must be sought for.

Nunns, Nunson.—Nick. 'the son of the nun,' i.e. the child of a lapsed vowess. M.E. nonne and nunne. Lower recalls an A.S. Nun, a personal name, but this was in 710, and there is no evidence that it survived to the 13th century. On the other hand we have proof of the origin given above.

Nuthall; v. Nuttall.

Nute; v. Nott (2).

Nutkins. — Bapt. 'the son of Cnut' (Canute), found in the 13th century as Note (v. Nott and Nutt). With the diminutive appended this became Notekin, now as a surname Nutkins. It is interesting to notice that the surname is found in co. Essex in 1273, and again turns up in 1666 in the same shire. The genitive suffix in Nutkins seems of recent origin.

Nye. — Local, 'atten ey' (?), at the ey, from residence on some small islet or eyot. The suffix -ey is common; cf. Northey, Forty, Ely, &c. In this case the final n in atten has become the prefix of the name proper; v. Nash, Noakes, Nelves, for similar instances. The following entry seems conclusive:

Oats; v. Oat.

Obey, Obee.—? Local, 'of Oby' (?). Mr. Lower says, 'An extinct parish now joined with Ashby, co. Norfolk.' But probably the name is a personal one, for besides Obe without local prefix
we find the pet form Obekin, i.e. little Obe, and such place-names as Obley and Obthorpe. With the variant Obee, cf. Applebee.

Occleston, Ockleston, Ocklestone.—Local, 'of Occlestone', a township in the parish of Middlewich, co. Chester. The meaning seems clear, i.e. the town or farmstead of Ogle. For a similar instance v. Oglethorpe, where that surname is found as Okolstorp as early as 1273.

Ockford.—Local; v. Oakford.

Ockleshaw.—Local, 'of Ockleshaw,' probably a spot near Occleston, q.v. The derivation seems to be the shaw or wood belonging to Ogle.

1651. Ralph Ockleshaw: East Cheshire, ii. 68.

Liverpool, 1.

Odiam, Odem, Odium.—Local, 'of Odiham,' a parish in co. Hants, twenty-six miles from Winchester.

Odecock.—Bapt. 'the son of Odo,' from the popular Ode or Oddy, with suffix -cock (v. Cock and Oddy). One more proof of the great favour extended to this personal name. The suffix -cock was only appended to the more familiar names; cf. Wilcock, Simcock, Jeffcock, &c.

Amicus Odecok, co. Norf., 1273. A.

Oddy, Oddie, Ody, Odey.—Bapt. 'the son of Odo' or 'Oddo,' still popular in Germany as Otto (v. Oat), a personal name, probably of Norman importation; v. Odling.

Odell.—Local, 'of Odell,' a parish in co. Bedford. Lower writes, 'The seat of an ancient barony written Wodhull, and by Norman corruption Wahull. The great Domesday Baron known as Walter Flandrensis, from his being a Fleming, held it, and his posterity was called "de Wahull"' (Patr. Brit. p. 243). Thus the derivation is wood-hill, the hill covered with trees; v. Hull (2).

Ogbourn, Ogborn.—Local, 'of Oxbourn,' two parishes in co. Wilts. No doubt compounded of oc, oak, and burn, a stream, the stream flowing by the oak-trees. For this lazy way of pronouncing the word cf. Slagg and Slack. Both parishes are situated near Marlborough.

Ogden, Oakden.—Local, 'of Oakden,' i.e. the oak-den; v. Dean. This family name, so familiar to South Lancashire, sprang up in the neighbourhood of Crompton and parish of Rochdale.

'In the reign of Edw. I. lived Sir Baldwin de Tyas . . . who granted to Sir Robert de Holland, in free marriage with Joan, his daughter, all his lands in Butterworth, the Cleggs, Garthside, Akeden, Holynworth, &c., in Rochdale': Baines' Lanc. i. 505.

This surname has widely extended in America, and on the map I see a town called Ogdenville.

Ogleby, Ogilby, Oglesby.—Local, 'of Ogleby.' I cannot find the spot. Of course the meaning is 'the by (or dwelling) of Ogle,' the first settler or owner; v. Oglethorpe and Ogle.

Oglethorpe.—Local, 'of Oglethorpe.' Oglestorp and Oglestun, in Domesday Book, are two places in co. York, near together, and under the same possessor. That Ogle as a component was a personal name is clear; also that the bearers were Scandinavians; v. Ogle.

Ointer.—Occup. 'the ointer,' possibly a seller of ointments. O. F. oindre, to anoint.

Michael le Hointer, London, 1273. A. Michael le Oynter, London, X.

Okell, Okill.—? Bapt. 'the son of Ogle' (?). Everything points to this derivation. That the great personal name Ogle was sharpened into Occle is evident, and other variants would follow; v. Oglethorpe, Occleston, and Ockleshaw. The London Directory has also Ockeford. I find no traces of Oakhill, which would first strike one as the parent.

Oldbury.—Local, 'of Oldbury,' parishes and hamlets in cos. Salop (2), Warwick, and Gloucester (2).

1614–5. Bapt.—Mary, d. Thomas Oldbury: St. Dionis Backchurch, i. 96.

Oldershaw, Olorenshaw Ollernshaw, Ollernshaw.—Local, 'at the alder-shaw' (v. Shaw), more correctly the 'aller-shaw,' the d being intrusive. Allern is adjectival, as in Linden, Beechen, Birken, Oaken. Thus Ollernshaw is the nearest to a correct form, wanting a change in the initial vowel only. I believe the spot 'Ollernshaw' is in the parish of Taxal, co. Derby, close by Shallcross Hall, which has made Shawcross and Shallcross so familiar a surname in that district. The Rev. M. Ollernshaw was minister of Mellor, co. Derby (adjacent), in 1810 (v. East Cheshire, ii. 132); cf. Ellershaw, the North-English equivalent. The following entries occur in the neighbouring church of Prestbury:

1633. — Ellen Oulrenshawe: ibid. p. 290.

Oldfield.—Local, (1) 'at the old field'; (2) 'of Oldfield.' Naturally this is a surname that belongs to various districts. Even the earliest instances are found scattered in separate parts of the country. 'Adam' or 'William at the Old Field' would be common. There is a hamlet in the parish of Heswall, co. Cheshire, which has given birth to many of the name.

Oldroyd.—Local, 'of the old royd,' from residence therein (v. Royd). Possibly Holroyd (q.v.) is the same. In the Reg. Univ. Oxf., I find Oldesworth, Holdsworth, Holsworth, and Ouldsworth, a parallel instance. Of course the signification may be 'the royd of Old,' the personal name of the original settler or owner (v. Old and Ould). One thing is certain, the surname arises in Yorkshire, probably the West Riding; v. Holroyd.

Olyphant, Olivant, Ollivant, Olyphant.—Nick. 'the elephant,' no doubt a complimentary allusion to the big, burly physique of the bearer. M.E. olivaunt.

'Item, pro aula "Olefante," Magister Kyllynworth, 1438': Mun. Acad. Oxon., p. 522.

This hall or smaller college was so called from the sign over the door or gate. Skelton has both 'olyfant' and 'olyphante.' He describes a woman in Eleanor Rummyng as 'Necked lyke an olyfant.'

I believe this is a Scottish surname.

Oliver, Ollier, Olver, Oliver.—Bapt. 'the son of Oliver.' Fr. Olivier, Breton, Olier. For 'a Rowland for an Oliver,' v. Yonge, i. 419. The paladin of Charlemagne made it popular, and gave it a knightly sound. After the Protector's days its popularity waned, and it has not yet recovered itself as a baptismal name. The Breton form Olier found friends in this country, and as a surname is fairly common.

Olivet, Ollett, Olyett.—Bapt. 'the son of Olive,' dim. Oliv-et. As Olley was the usual nick, naturally a dim. Olliet or Olyett was formed from it; v. Olley (2). From my first instances it will be seen that this diminutive arose in good time to become an aspirant for hereditary honours.

Olley.—(1) Local, 'de Oilli,' or 'Oyly,' or 'Oilgi.' Robert de Oilgi appears as a tenant-in-chief in many counties; also Wido de Oilgi in co. Oxford (Domesday). Probably one of the Oullis near Falaise (Lower). At any rate, our Olleys may say they 'came over with the Conqueror.' The surname ramified strongly, and is now represented in every grade of society. v. Doyle.

John Onehand. D.

Richard Onhand, C. R., 23 Hen. VI.

Onion, Onions.—Bapt. 'the son of Enion,' a favourite personal name in old Welsh records. The modern directories abound with variants, &c. (v. Benyon, Pinnion, &c.). Mr. Lower says, 'In the register of East Grinstead, Sussex, in the first half of the 17th century, the name is written indifferently Ennion and Onion.' This quite tallies with my own observations.

Onley, Only.—Local, 'of Onely,' a hamlet in the parish of Barby, co. Northants, seven miles from Daventry. Although I do not see any early instances, the first of my references settles the matter.

Edward Onley, or Onelie, co. Northampton, 1583: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 128.

The following two quotations evidently refer to the same individual:

Onslow.—Local, 'of Onslow,' a place within the Liberty of Shrewsbury, co. Salop (in Domesday Book spelt Ondeslow). A family of this name early arose here. 'The Onslows were seated at Onslow in Shropshire as far back as Ric. I, and probably earlier. The punning motto of this ancient house, 'Festina lente,' On Slow, is probably one of the happiest conceits of its kind' (Lower).

1676. Married—Richard Onslowe and Eliz. Tulse: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 38.

Orchard, Orchard.—Local, 'at the orchard.' Many local terms took an initial n, which in reality was the final letter of the prefix -atten (=at the). Thus arose Noakes, Nash, Nalder, Nangle,

&c. Orchard was no exception. I find, for instance:

Robert atte Northcherd, co. Oxf., 20 Edw. I. R.

Which more correctly should be

Robert atten Orthcherd.

But in general the entries run thus:

John de la Orcharde, co. Soms., 1273. A.

Richard atte Orchard, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 212.

John atte Orchard, C. R., 14 Edw. III. pt. i.

Ormandy.—Local, 'of Osmotherly,' a township in the parish of Ulverston, co. Lanc. This surname is still almost entirely confined to the Furness district of N. Lanc. The former name of Osmotherly was Osmunderlaw, and Ormandy is found in the neighbourhood since the beginning of the 15th century. Everything points to prove the above origin; v. Osmotherly.

1552. Married—William Holme and Agnes Ormundie: Reg. St. Mary, Ulverston, p. 18.

1553. Bapt.—Ann Ormundie: ibid. p. 129.

Orme, Ormes, Ormson, Orm.—Bapt. 'the son of Orme' (Orm, Domesday); cf. the local Urmston, Ormston, Ormsby, Ormskirk, Ormerod, and the Great Orme's Head. In this last the meaning Orm, the serpent (whence worm), comes out, i.e. 'the serpent's head.' Miss Yonge (ii. 290) says there are twenty-two Ormes in the Landnama-bok.

1718. Married—Aaron Hawkins and Mary Ormshaw: St. Michael, Cornhill, i. 59.

Manchester, 1, 0; Liverpool, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Lanc.), 0, 1.

Ormiston, Ormston.—Local, 'of Ormiston,' the town or stead of Orme, the first settler (v. Orme), a parish in co. Haddington, also a locality in co. Roxburgh. The i is intrusive, just as a is intrusive in Greenaway, q.v.

1733. Married—John Slamaker and Eleanor Ormiston: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 12.

London, 1, 7; MDB. (co. Northumberland), 0, 1; Philadelphia, 2, 3.

Ormond.—Bapt. 'the son of Osmond' (?), q.v.; a variant (?); cf. Ormandy for Osmunderly. But it is quite possible that Ormond in that form was a personal name as distinct from Osmond. The variant from Osmond to Ormand is not natural.

Ormsby, Ornsby, Ormsbee.

—Local, 'of Ormsby,' parishes in dioc. of York, Lincoln, and Norwich. The meaning is manifestly the by or dwelling of Orme (v. Orme). It is now becoming recognized that a large proportion of our place-names are compounded with the personal name of the original settler. Ormsbee is a natural Americanism (cf. Applebee).

Orpen, Orpin.—The family of Orpen or Erpen is of remote antiquity, and is stated to be derived from Erpen, a French noble of royal descent. Such is the statement in Burke's Landed Gentry, though the pedigree as there given does not go further back than the 16th century (v. Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 250).

Orrell, Orrell.—Local, (r) 'of Orrell,' a township in the parish of Wigan, co. Lanc. The suffix, as will be seen below, is -hull, i.e. -hill.

'Richard de Horul in the reign of Richard I. held half a carucate in thage': Baines' Lanc. ii. 186.

'In 32 Edw. I. Robert de Holand had a charter for free warren in Holand, Hale, Orhull, and Martlan': ibid.

(2) 'Of Orrell,' a township in the parish of Sephton, co. Lanc.

'In 13 Edw. III. Henry Blundell, of Crosby, gave to William, his son, all his property in Rainil, Orel, Downlitherland, Thornton, and Sephton': Baines' Lanc. ii. 398.

The surname passed over the border into co. Cheshire, and is well known there and in Lancashire.

Osbaldston, Osbaldeston, Osbaldeston.—Local, 'of Osbaldeston,' a township in the parish of Blackburn, co. Lanc. The Osbaldestons of Osbaldeston had a charity in Blackburn Parish Church (Baines' Lanc. ii. 66). The meaning is 'the town (i.e. settlement) of Osbald.' The i and e in Osbaldiston and Osbaldeston are intrusive; cf. Greenaway for Greenway, where the a is equally intrusive.

Osborough.—Local, 'of Osborough.' For this change of x for s, v. Oscanoff. For variants of Osborough, v. Oxberry.

Philadelphia, 1.

Oscroft.—Local, 'at the oxcroft,' i.e. the enclosure for oxen. Naturally the surname would settle down into Oscroft. A parallel instance will be found in the case of Oxspring and Ofspring, q.v. Another example of the change is to be seen in the Philadelphia Directory, where Osborough takes the place of Oxborough.

Osekin, Oskins.—Bapt. One of the many pet forms ending in -kin (cf. Wilkin). Oskin would be the familiar appellation of some Osmund, Osbern, Oswin, or Osbert. It is quite possible that Hoskins is its present representative. The aspirate presents no difficulty, and the final s is of course genitive, as in Tompkins or Jones; v. Hosken.

Osgerby.—Local, 'of Osgodby': (1) a township in the parish of Lavington, co. Linc.; (2) also a parish in co. Linc., four miles from Market Rasen; (3) also a township in the parish of Hemingbrough, near Selby, E. Rid. Yorks. The change of the surname to Osgerby was very natural. The origin is plain, 'the dwelling of Osgod,' from the name of the first settler or proprietor; v. Osgood.

Osmotherly.—Local, 'of Osmotherly,' a parish in N. Rid. Yorks, and a township in the parish of Ulverston, North Lancashire. It is found early in the Furness district as Asmunderlaw. It is curious that while the surname has long disappeared from the North, it should be found at Cliffe, near Rochester (but v. Ormandy). The derivation is simple, i.e. 'the law of Osmund,' a law meaning a rising ground; v. Low.

Ostringer, Astringer.—Offic. 'the ostricer,' a falconer. Dame Julyan Berners says, 'Ye shall understonde that they ben called Ostregeres that kepe goshawkes or tercelles' (edit. 1496, Bk. iii). I dare not hazard a guess at its origin, but the earliest form is Ostricer. This became Ostriger. John Woodde, one of the Os-treger of ower sovereign Lord' (30 Henry VIII; v. Notes and Queries, 1885, p. 306). This same individual is styled in a deed a fortnight earlier, 'Oistrynger' (ibid.). Shakespeare has it astringer. Astringer and Ostringer are natural corruptions (cf. Pottinger from Potager, messenger from messenger, &c.). Ostringer occurs in Blount's Gloss. p. 459 (Halliwell).

Ottiwel, Ottewell, Ottwell.—Bapt. 'the son of Otewel.' Halliwell under larder quotes:

'Thowas Otewel fol of mood And faught as he were wood.'

Romance of Otuel, p. 64.

A popular favourite in its time, but now, I fear, quite obsolete as a font-name, but found till the beginning of the last century. An early legendary name (v. Yonge). As a surname it still survives the ravages of time. Ottiwel, natural son of Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, was tutor to the children of Henry I, who perished at sea in 1120 (Lower). Perhaps this may account for the popularity of the baptismal name in Cheshire. Ottiwel Higginbotham gave evidence in 1522 as to the boundary of Marple (Earwaker's East Cheshire, ii. 52).

Outred, Oughtred.—Bapt. 'the son of Ughtred.' Domesday Book, Uctred. One of the earliest priors of Hexham was 'Uthred erl Killer sune' (Priory of Hexham, Surt. Soc.). 'Uthred . . . gathered an army, rescued Durham, and gained a signal victory over the Scots.' This was a famous Earl of Northumberland. Hence we find the surname in that district (v. Freeman's Norman Conquest, i. 326).

1641. Married—William Watson and Eliz. Orwerber: St. Michael, Cornhill, i. 29. New York, 1.

Overdo.—? Nick. The sobriquet of a kitchen or cook (?).

'Thing that is overdon . . . it is a vice.'

Chaucer, C. T. 16113.

Henry Overdo, Close Roll, 14 Edw. IV.

Such nicknames were common and popular, but few survived.

Overend.—Local, 'at the Overend'; cf. Townsend, Woodend, Fieldsend, &c. (v. Over). With Overheynd, cf. Townshend. The letter h seems to have crept in easily. 'At the end of the shore' seems to be the derivation. All these compounds of Over go to prove that the affix implied a flat river-side as well as the sea-shore.

Overman.—Offic. 'the overman,' a gaffer(?). Williamle Overer occurs (Close Roll, 2 Edw. I). Overman still lives, but seems to have found its latest home in America.

1647. Thomas Overman and Eliz. Ross: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 278.
1650. Married—George Saunders and Alice Overman: St. Dionis Backchurch, i. 27.

In the London Directory occurs 'Overman's Alm Houses, Montague Close, Borough, S.E.?' probably an old endowment. This surname seems to have gone to America and taken the whole family with it.

London, 10; Liverpool 1; New York, 17.

Overy, Ouvry.—Local, 'of Overy.' Mr. Lower says that this is an extinct parish in co. Oxf. If it be true that the Ouvrys came into England at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685, a statement which seems to be well established, then Ouvry has a separate parentage.

Oxenhird.—Occup. 'a tender of oxen'; v. Oxnard.

Oxford; v. Oxenford.

Oxlade, Oxlid.—Local, 'of the oak-slade' (v. Slade). The modification of Oclade into Oxlade was inevitable. Probably some spot in co. Oxon. Both cos. Berks and Bucks have instances still existing.

London, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Bucks), 1, 0; (co. Berks), 1, 0.

Oxley, Oxlee.—Local, 'of Oxley.' I cannot find the spot. A familiar Yorkshire surname, but probably known to other counties, as the 'ox-meadow' would readily become a local title.

1562. Robert Oxley, weaver, and Eliz. Goodchild: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 24.

1793. Married.—Jeremiah Oxnard and Mary Blakiston: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 105.

For several years I thought Oxnard was extinct. I was much pleased, therefore, on leaving Cultercoats Station, Newcastle, Aug. 29, 1886, to see the name over a shop in the immediate street to the left. Afterwards I found several instances in the Newcastle Directory.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, 2, o; Boston (U.S.), 3, o; New York, 0, 1.

Oxpring, Oxspring, Ofspring.—Local, 'of Oxspring,' a village in the parish of Penistone, W. Rid. Yorks. There is good evidence that all who bear this name, wherever settled in later times, spring from this spot. Under the title 'Villata de Oxpryng' occur the names:

Ofspring is a manifest corruption, although a manor named Ofspring is mentioned (A.D. 1273; v. A. i. 226) in the Hundred of Folkestone, co. Kent.

'Thomas Ofspringe, alias Oxspringe, of Kent, whoe came out of Yorkshire.'

P

Pace, Pacey.—Bapt. 'the son of Pace,' pet Pacey. The variants of this Easter name are many; v. Pash, Pask, Peace, &c. Easter-egging in North Lancashire is still Pace-egging, and in my old parish (Ulverston) the sale of pace-eggs is large as the Easter comes round; cf. Noel, Pentecost, &c.

London, 1, 1, 1.

Paddison.—Bapt. 'the son of Patrick'; v. Pattinson, of which Paddison is a lazier form. Although Paddy is Irish, Paddison is purely of English descent. It must never be forgotten that Patrick was a most popular North-English personal name in the surname period.

1678. Bapt.—Bartholomew, s. John Paddison: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 281.

1795. Married—Samuel Paddison and Eliz. Vergette: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 138.
MDB. (co. Linc.), 13; London, 2.

Padgett, Padgett.—Official; v. Paget.

Padley.—Local, 'of Padley,' a hamlet in the parish of Hope, co. Derby. The surname has crossed the border into Nottinghamshire.

Pagan.—Bapt. 'the son of Pagan.' A very familiar font-name in the 13th century, and earlier, leaving a large legacy to our directories in the shape of Paine, Payn, Payne, and their other forms (q.v.). Edmundus filius Pagani (Domesday). For a history of this word, v. Gibbon's Decline and Fall, ch. xxi. ad finem. For diminutives, v. Paynel and Pannett.

Paget, Pagett, Padgett, Padgett, Padgit.—(1) Nick. 'the page,' dim. Paget. Boy pages seem to have been held in high esteem. No instance, however, occurs in the Hundred Rolls of other contemporary records so far as my observation goes. I presume it is a 14th or 15th century importation from France, and corresponds exactly to our Littlepage and Smallpage, q.v.

Johannes Paget, laylour, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 118.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Pachet.' If Paget be (occasionally) a corruption of Pachet, then early instances abound in plenty; v. Patchett. Padgett or Padgett would also be natural corruptions.

Pain, Paine, Payn, Payne.—Bapt. 'the son of Pagan', popularly Pain and Payne. How great a favourite this font-name was in the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries will be seen by a glance at the London and provincial directories. The softened form of pagan (a countryman) is found in Chaucer:

'The Constable, and Dame Hermegild, his wife,
Were payenes and that country everywhere.' Man of Lawes Tale.

Pagan or Payn was of Norman introduction. It is curious that a great leader of atheistical principles should have borne this name.

'He never knew pleasure who never knew Payn.'

has been said of several jovial bearers of the cognomen.

Palethorp(e).—Local; v. Pailthorpe.

Paley.—Local, 'of Paley,' now Paley Green, in the parish of Giggleswick, W. Rid. Yorks, consisting of two farmsteads. Mr. Lower writes, 'This was borne as a personal name by a powerful Dane, mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle as Pallig, A.D. 1101' (Patr. Brit. p. 255). My derivation is manifestly the correct one, as all the Paleys come from Yorkshire.

Robertus de Palay, of Litton, in the parish of Arncliffe, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 278.

Adam de Palay, of Giggleswick, 1379: ibid. p. 279.

John Paley, of Melling, on the Yorkshire border, 1591: Wills at Chester, i. 147.

Richard Paley, of Clifton, 1673: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, 1, 206.

These four references conclusively show that the Paleys are sprung from the spot indicated above.

Palgrave.—Local, 'of Palgrave,' a parish in co. Suffolk, one mile from Diss; also a hamlet in the parish of Sporre, co. Norfolk. This surname has no connexion with the German Pfalzgraf, a Count-Palatine, as has been several times suggested. It is local, not official.

1728. Bapt. — Susanna, d. Robert Palgrave: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 181. London, 2; MDB. (Norfolk), 1.

Paliser, Palliser, Palser, Palister, Pallister.—Occup. 'the paliser,' or with feminine suffix 'the pallister,' a surname seemingly peculiar to Yorkshire, where it still flourishes. The Surtees Society records contain early references (unfortunately I have mislaid my notes) to such persons as 'Robert Redman, palayser.'

'Paid to James Foster, palycer, as a present for making the payle (i. e. fence) near the dwelling of the Lord Prior, near the butgarth, 12d.': Liber Bursarii. Eccles. Dunelmensis, Surt. Soc.

The palliser (Fr. palis, a pale, a stake) was a kind of parker, one who guarded or fenced enclosures. As regards pallister, it may be as well to say that the Poll Tax (1379) proves that the feminine suffix -ster was very popular in all occupative names (v. Slaster for Slater); cf. palisade.

Palismaker.—Occup. 'the palis maker,' a maker of fences; v. Paliser or Pallister.

William Palyecmaker, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 242.

Pallet, Pallett, Pallatt.—Local, 'of Pawlett,' q.v. I doubt not these are variants. Pellatt is well established in the United States. As will be seen below, the form Palet is early found in co. Soms.

York, 1.

Palser.—Occup. 'the paliser' (q.v.). Palser is now the commoner form.

Pamphilon, Pamplin, Pamplin, Pampling.—Local or nick. For meaning of the name 'Papillon,' of which these are corruptions, v. Papillon. The following in Halliwell's Dict. may, however, prove that a different application of the word gave them existence. 'Pampilion, a coat of different colours, formerly worn by servants. It occurs with this explanation in Hollyband's Dictionarie, 1593. There was a kind of fur so called.' If a cant name for a servitor attired in butterfly colours, then Pamphilon and Pamplin are nicknames. But the local origin seems the more probable, for which v. Papillon.

Pancefoot, Pauncefort.—Local, 'de Pauncevot,' probably of Norman extraction. 'In characters it is Latinized De Pede Planco, that is, "of the Splay Foot," but for this rendering there appears to be no authority. The first of the name on record is Bernard Pancevolt, a Domesday tenant-in-chief in Hampshire. Geoffrey de Pauncevot was steward to the household of King John': Lower, Patr. Brit. p. 255.

Pancoast.—Local; a corruption of Pankhurst, q.v. This well-established American surname went out as Pancrust (obviously for Pankhurst). By degrees it settled down as Pancoast.

1635. Anus (Agnes) Pancrust, to New

Pannell.—Bapt. 'the son of Paynel' (q.v.), a dim. of Payn or Pain, q.v.; v. Pannett for a parallel instance. The same individual is thus referred to:

Fukey Panel, co. Notts, Hen. III—Edw.

Geoffrey le Paneter. G.

The serjeant 'which is called the Chief Pantrer of the kinges mouth'

(Liber Niger domus Edw. IV,
Household Ord., p. 70, quoted by Way in Prompt. Parv.). The Prompt. Parv. has 'panthere, panitarius.' Mr. Way reminds us in a note that this form survives in the surname 'Pantler.' John Russell, in his Boke of Nurture, directs:

'The first yere, my son, thou shalt be pantere, or butillare,
Thou must have three knyffes kene in pantry, I say thee, evermore.'

One duty of the monastery panter was the distribution of loaves to the poor (v. Lower, Patr. Brit.).
Panther is a somewhat ferociouslooking corruption; cf. Gunther

Park, Parke, Parkes, Parks.
—Local, 'at the park,' from residence therein. It must not be forgotten that while Park may be pluralized into Parks and Parkes
(cf. Bridges, Styles, Sykes, Dykes), it is just as likely that they are abbreviations of Parkins; cf. Perkins (v. Parkin).

Parker.—Occup. 'the parker,' the guardian, keeper, or custodian of a park. Found in every early register all over the country. I furnish but a few instances; v. Park.
'Parcar, verdier': Palsgrave. 'Par-kere, indagator': Prompt. Parv.
This surname has almost become a rival of Smith, Wright, Green, Brown, Jones, and Robinson for numbers.

Parkerson.—Bapt. 'the son of Peter' (v. Parkin); cf. Patterson for Pattinson, or Catterson for Cattinson. Of course, it may be 'the son of the parker' (v. Parker), and belong to a small class of which Smithson, Wrightson, Tay-lorson, or Hindson are prominent members. But the baptismal derivation is the more probable.

1737. Married — Richard Cook and Margaret Parkerson: St. Geo. Han. Sq.
i. 19.
Philadelphia, 5.

Parkes; v. Park.

Parkhill.—Local, 'of the park hill,' i.e. from residence on the hill in the park. I do not know the spot.

Philadelphia, 9.

Parkhouse.—Local, 'at the park house,' the cottage where the parker lived. From residence therein.

Yorks. p. 127.
London, 4; New York, 4.

Parkhurst.—Local, 'at the park hurst,' i.e. the wood in the park; v. Hurst. I cannot discover the spot. Mr. Lower says, 'A place in the Isle of Wight.' Of course many places might be so styled.

Parkin, Parkins, Parkinson,
Parkisson, Parkeson, Perkin,
Perkins, Perkinson, Parkyn,
Parkyns.—Bapt. 'the son of Peter,' from the pet Perkin or Parkin; cf. Wat-kin, Wil-kins,
Wil-kinson, &c. There are no
Perkins or Parkins in the Hundred Rolls, while the French diminutives
Perrin and Perrott are common.
What may be called the Flemish forms appeared in Yorkshire and the East counties about the beginning of the 14th century. With Perkins and Parkins, cf. Clerk and Clark, Derby and Darby, &c.

Parlebien, Parlbly (?).—? Nick. This name was so generally established in the 13th and 14th centuries that it ought to have left some descendants. Probably Parlbly is one of them.

in -nham becomes -man by corruption; cf. Swetman for Swetenham, Deadman for Debenham, &c.

1759. Married—Thomas Parnham and Eliz. Ayscough: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 84.

London, 2.

Parmelee, Parmele, Parmly, Parmalee.—Local, 'of Palmerley.'

I cannot find the spot, though doubtless it exists somewhere in the south of England, nor can I discover any trace of the surname on English soil. It went out to America with the Pilgrim Fathers as Palmerley, i.e. 'the meadow that belonged to the palmer' (v. Palmer); cf. Palmerston.

John Palmerley (aged 20), for New England, 1635, in the Elizabeth and Ann barque: Hotten's Lists of Emigrants, p. 58.

His descendants may be found in most of the cities in the United States in the various disguises enumerated above.

Parnall, Parnell.—Bapt. 'the son of Petronilla.' This was abbreviated to Paronell, and then to Parnel or Pernel. One of our commonest girl-names, it lost character, like Nan and Nanny, by becoming a cant term for women of ill repute. 'Parnel, a lascivious girl' (Bailey). Halliwell says, 'Pernel, the pimpernel, a flower that always shuts up its blossoms before rain.' Then he quotes, 'But these tender pernels must have one gown for the day, another for the night': Pilkington's Works, p. 56. But is not the Puritan bishop referring to Pernel in the sense ascribed above? Endless instances might be given of the name in its earlier and more honest popularity. As usual, Cornwall kept to the name long after it had been given up by the rest of the world:

1706. Bapt. — Peternell Michell: Reg. St. Columb Major, Cornwall.

1714. — Petronell Peters: ibid.

St. Petronilla was besought for fevers. Barnaby Gooze says:

'The quartane ague and the rest

Doth Pernel take away:

And John preserves his worshippers
From prison every day.'

Parratt, Parrett, Parritt, Parrott, Perratt, Perrett, Perot, Perrot, Perrott, Porrett.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Peter,' from Fr. Pierre, dim. Perrot or Parrot (little Peter). Par and Per are similarly found in Parkinson or Perkinson, Parkins or Perkins; v. Porrett. (2) Nick. 'the parrot,' i.e. the chatterer. The origin is exactly the same, the application only being different. In France pierrôt, i.e. little Peter, is still the name for a sparrow, as Robin with us for the redbreast. The first instance below will prove how early the diminutive of Peter gave name to the tropical bird we are familiar with, and how popular the name of Peter was; cf. mag-pie, and v. Philipshank.

Parrock, Parrick.—Local, 'at the parrock,' i.e. park. 'Parrocke, alytell parke, parquet' (Palsgrave). The modern form paddock is a corruption (v. Skeat, paddock 2); Halliwell, parrick; Prompt. Parv. parrok. A.S. pearroc, a small enclosure. The surname Parrick is a modern variant of Parrock.

Pashler.—Local. Doubtless a variant of Passelewe (v. Pashley). It is found in the district wherein the surname flourished for many centuries.

MDB. (co. Hunts), 5; (co. Suffolk), 1.

Pashley, Pasley.—Local, 'of Passelewe,' now Pashley or Pasley, a manor in the parish of Ticehurst, co. Sussex (Lower). I doubt whether this is correct. There is no trace of a Sussex parentage. I suspect it is of Norman extraction, although we need not accept Skinner's etymology: 'à Fr. passer l'eau, sc. a tranando vel transeundo aquam.' This is a meaningless guess. Possibly Lower is correct, and it may be that the name passed from Sussex to Norfolk at an early period. Nevertheless, without proof it is not satisfactory.

Adam Passevaunt, co. Wilts, 1273. A. Walter Passavant, C. R., 33 Hen. III. Roger Passavant. E. William Passavaunt. H. West Rid. Court Dir., 3.

Passenger, Passager.—Nick. 'the passenger,' a wayfarer, a traveller, from O.F. passager, with intrusive n; cf. Messenger.

1771. Married—William Leutten and Rebecca Passenger: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 208. London, 2, o; Philadelphia, o, 1; MDB. (co. Kent), 1, o.

Passey.—Local, 'de Pasey.' Probably from some spot in Normandy.

Robert de Pascy, co. Linc., 1273. A. 1635. Bapt.—Richard, s. Valentine Passie: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 130. 1798. Married—William Blain and Mary Passey: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 176. London, 1; Oxford, 1.

Passingham.—Local, 'of Passenheim,' a parish in co. Northampton.

1762. Married—Robert Passingham and Eliz. Lloyd: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 115. London, 2; MDB. (co. Bedford), 1; (co. Camb.), 1.

Paston.—Local, 'of Paston.' Parishes in cos. Norfolk and Northampton; also a township in the parish of Kirk Newton, co. Northumberland.

Eustace de Paston, co. Norf., 1273. A. Warin de Paston, co. Norf., ibid. Alicia de Paston, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 50.

1665. Buried—John Paston, servant to John Clerke, stationer: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 219.

Patch.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Pache' (i.e. Easter), one of almost endless variants of Pasche; v. Pask, Pash, Pass, Pace, Peace, Pease, &c. For a dim., v. Patchett.

John Pacche, co. Bucks, 1273. A. Richard Pacche, co. Oxf., ibid. Robertus Pache, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 62.

(2) Nick. 'Patch,' an old name for the official fool, a very honourable personage in his day. Wolsey had two fools, both occasionally called Patch (v. Douce, Illustrations of Shakespeare, i. 258). It is hard to say which, (1) or (2), is meant in the following:

'Item, the same day to Pache in reward for bringing a present,' 1502: Privy Purse Exp., Eliz. of York, p. 74.

'Item, delivered to Pache, for a present of poyngarnettes oranges,' 1503: ibid. p. 93.

The following is obvious:

'And ii payer (of hosen) for patche, the kinges fole (fool),' 1530: Privy Purse Expenses, Henry VIII, p. 86.

1610. Married—Richard Patch and Catherine Patch: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 36.

1614. John Blague and Anne Patche: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 30. London, 3; Boston (U.S.), 41.

Patchell.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Pascal,' q.v. This became Pashall and Patchell; v. Patch and Patchett. (2) Local, 'of Pattishall,' a parish in co. Northampton (v. Pateshall). It is possible this is the true derivation. From Pateshall to Patchell is but a single and easy step.

1738. Martha Patchell, pensioner, died Aug. 15: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 306. Boston (U.S.), 2; Philadelphia, 10.

Patchett.—Bapt. 'the son of Pache' (i.e. Easter), from the dim. Pache, one becoming popularly Patch (q.v.) and the other Patchet. There can be no doubt about this derivation (v. Pash, Pask, Pace, Peace, Pease, &c.). Patchett is still a well-known Yorkshire surname.

Alicia Pachot, 1379: ibid. p. 126. 1571. Richard Pache, rector of Lit-cham, co. Norf.: FF. x. 14.

1766. Married—Thomas Robinson and Ann Patchitt: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 154.

1790.—George Patchett and Eleanor Vaughan: ibid. ii. 39. London, 1; West Rid. Court Dir. 8; Boston (U.S.), 1; Oxford, 1.

Patching, Patchen.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Pachin,' from Pach (Easter), dim. Pachin or Pachon; cf. Patch (q.v.) for Pache. The g is, of course, excrement, as in Jennings. Rob-in and Col-in are familiar examples of this dim. in England, and Alison (little Alice) in Scotland.

Johannes Pachon, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

(2) Local, 'of Patching,' a parish in co. Sussex, five miles from Arundel. As I find the surname is well known in co. Sussex, this must claim first place.

1422. Thomas Pachyng: Cal. of Wills in Court of Husting (2).

1783. Married—William Watson and Ann Patching: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 342.

1809.—Payn Patching and Sarah Whitehouse: ibid. ii. 420. London, 1, o; MDB. (co. Sussex), 4, o; New York, o, 4.

Pate, Pates.—Bapt. 'the son of Patrick,' from nick. Pate or Pait (Irish Pat). A great North-English name in its day; v. Patey and Paitson.

Pateman, Patman.—(1) Occup. 'Pate-man,' i.e. the servant of Pate, i.e. Patrick; cf. Addyman, Matthewman, Jackman, &c.; a fairly large class. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Bateman' (q.v.), a sharpened form; cf. Peverley for Beverley or Parnham for Barnham.

1652. Married.—Francis Patman and Mary Graunt: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 88.
 1786.—Thomas Harwood and Ann Patman: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 383.
 London, 5, 4.

Paternoster.—Occup. 'the paternoster,' a maker of paternosters, rosaries, chaplets, beads strung together for pattering aves. Paternoster Row may have been the Paternosters' Row.

'And thanne was it a pece of the paternoster, Fiat voluntas tua.'

 1802. Married.—Edward Patmore and Hannah Isaac: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 256.
 MDB. (co. Essex), 7, o; (co. Herts), 3, o; (co. Somerset), o, 2.

Paton.—Bapt. 'the son of Patrick,' from nick. Pate or Pat, and dim. Pat-on; v. Patten. This was the favourite Border form, and remains a Scottish surname to-day; cf. Alison for Alice, or Marion for Mary. It must be remembered that Patrick was one of the most popular of North-English font-names in the surname period.

Agnes Paton-wyf, i.e. the wife of Paton, C. R., 18 Hen. VI.

The following is decidedly Scottish:

1774. Married.—David Paton and Jane Blair: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 236.
 London, 9; New York, 17.

Patrick, Patrickson.—Bapt. 'the son of Patrick.' A once great North-English font-name, leaving many descendants; v. Pattinson, Patterson, Pate, Paitson, Patey, Pattie, &c. The Cumberland surname of Patrickson is almost extinct, but has a representative living in Furness, North Lancashire.

 London, 15, o; Scales (Ulverston), o, 1; Philadelphia, 17, o.

Pattemore; v. Patmore.

Patten, Patton.—Bapt. 'the son of Patrick,' from the nick. Pate, and dim. Patt-in or Patt-on; v. Paton and Pattinson. Mr. Lower quotes Burke's Landed Gentry to the following effect:

'Richard Patten, son and heir of Richard Patten, was of Patten, or Patten, near Chelmsford, co. Essex, in 1119. From him the Pattens of Bank Hall, co. Lanc., claim lineal descent': Patr. Brit. p. 258.

I do not assert that this is true or false. All I say is that the Scottish and North-English Pattens have no local derivation, but are the sons of Patrick.

1790. Married.—George Fowle and Margaret Pattenden: St. Geo. Han. Sq. iii. 39.
 London, 3.

Pattenmaker, Pattener.—Occup. 'the pattenner,' i.e. a maker of pattens. 'Pateyne, of tymbyre or yron to walke with, calopodium': Prompt. Parv. 'Calopifex, a maker of patens or styles': Ortus. 'Paten-maker, patinier': Palsg. Mr. Way says: 'Used by ecclesiastics when treading the cold pavement of a church,' and quotes church accounts of St. Mary Hill, London, 1491, 'for ii pair of pattens for the priests.' But he adds that they were part of every gentleman's costume. In 1464 the Patynmakers of London alleged as a grievance that the 'fletchers alone could use aspen wood, the lightest tymbre to make of patyns and clogges': Rot. Parl. iv. 567.

Pattinson, Pattison, Patten-son, Pattisson, Patterson, Paterson.—Bapt. 'the son of Patrick' (q.v.), from the nick. Pate and dim. Patt-in; cf. Colin, Robin. Patterson is a corruption of Pattinson; cf. Matterson, Dickerson, Catterson, for Mattinson, Dickinson, Catterson. Patrick was a great North-English font-name in the surname period. It would be useless furnishing many instances. Sufficient will be found under Pate, Patten, Paton, &c.

Peabody, Paybody.—? Nick. I find no early trace of this name. Paybody seems to have been the original form of the prefix, but what it means I cannot say; cf. Gentilcorps, Freebody, Goodbody, Baldbody, &c.

1615. Thomas Payboddy, co. Leic.: Reg. Univ. Oxfr. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 347.
— Married—Thomas Stubbs and Eliz. Pyeboddy: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 42.

London, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Bucks), 0, 1; Philadelphia, 10, 0.

Peace, Pease.—Bapt. 'the son of Pece,' a great Yorkshire surname. No doubt Pece was one of the many variants of Pace, i.e. Easter, so given because born or baptized on that day; v. Pask, Pace, Pass, Pacey, &c. In Lancashire Easter-egging is still Face-egging or Peace-egging.

Reginald Pecche, co. Hunts, ibid.
Bartholomew de Pecche, alias Bartholomew Pecche, co. Berks, Hen. III—Edw. I. K.
John Petch, co. Warwick, 20 Edw. I. R.
1807. Married—Thomas Smith and Dorothy Petch: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 377.
London, 7, 4; Boston (U.S.), 8, 2.

Peacock, Peacocke, Pocoock, Pocoocke, Pycock.—Nick. 'the peacock,' the gaudy, the proud. Probably the sobriquet would not be unacceptable to the bearer. At any rate the surname is common to-day. M.E. pecok, pacok, pocek, pehen, and pohen; v. Skeat.

Pearce, Pearse.—Bapt.; a variant of Piers, q.v. Oxford, 12, 1.

Peard, ?Peart.—?Nick. 'the pear-headed,' from the shape of the head. This solution seems strange, but it is highly probable. The surname Pearhead occurs in the Hundred Rolls, as may be seen below:

Robert Perheved, co. Notts, 1273. A. 1581. Edward Peard, co. Devon: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 99. 1588. John Pearte and Eliz. Eyre: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 170. 1618. Hugh Peard, of Bristol: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 373. MDB. (co. Notts), 0, 1; (co. Devon), 4, 0.

Pearl.—Nick. or personal name; M.E. perle, a precious gem.

Thomas Perle, C. R., 17 Edw. III. pt. ii. 1805. Married—Matthew Pearl and Sarah Ellen Morris: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 317. London, 6; Philadelphia, 5.

Pearman, Pearmain, Pearmine, Permain.—Local, 'de

Permond,' probably a spot in Normandy or the Low Countries. As with all other names ending in mond, the final d is dropped; cf. Osman, Wayman, &c.

John de Permond, bailiff of Norwich, 1316: FF. iii. 79. John Pyrmund, bailiff of Norwich, 1336: ibid. iv. 356. 1675. Married—Thomas Permond and Jane Turner: St. Jas. London, 3.

Peascod, Peasegood, Peasegood.—Nick. 'Peas-cod,' a peapod. 'Pescodde, siliqua': Prompt. Parv. 'Pescodes': Lydgate's London Lickpenny. Probably, like Freshfish, a nick. from the street cry of 'hot peascods.' It still remains with us as a surname; cf. Peppercorn and Barleycorn. Peasegood is a manifest corruption.

Pease.—Bapt.; v. Peace.

Peasnall, Peasnell.—Local, 'of Peasenhall,' a parish in co. Suffolk.

Ralph de Pesenhal, co. Suff., 1273. A. William de Pessenhall, bailiff of Norwich, 1250: FF. iii. 59.

1793. Married—John Commis and Martha Peasnell: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 104.

MDB. (co. Northampton), 1, 2.

Peat, Peatt, Peet, Peete.—(1) Nick. A delicate person, a pampered pet; the older form of pet.

'A pretty peat': Taming of the Shrew, Act i. sc. i.

'I overtook the wench, the pretty peat': Donne's Poems, p. 90 (Halliwell).
'As sick as a peate': Notes and Queries, 1857, p. 382.

I can suggest no other derivation; cf. Sweetlove, Sweet, Leifchild, Leaf, &c.

(2) Local, 'at the peat,' from residence thereby.

Richard de Peyt, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 80.

1655. Married.—Enock Peate and Barbary Salter: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 260. 1664.—John Peat and Isabel Rosse: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 117.

1660. Bapt.—Katherine Pecke: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 100.

London, 17; New York, 108.

Peckham; v. Packham.

Peddell, Peddle.—Offic. 'the beadle.' German, Pedell. If not of German descent, the name is English by change of b to p; cf. Peverley for Beverley, or Peattie for Beattie.

1801. Married.—William Coe and Eliz. Piddle: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 242.

1808.—William Peedle and Sarah Bolton: ibid. p. 384.

With Piddle, cf. Biddle (v. Beadle).

London, 1, 2.

Pedder, Pedlar, Pedler.—Occup. 'the pedder,' a chapman, a pedlar. 'Peddare, calatharius, piscarius' (Prompt. Parv.), i.e. one who makes baskets, or one who hawks fish, from ped, a pannier or basket. The market in Norwich was, or is, a ped-market, according to Way, from the fact that the wares were brought in from the country in peds, and thus exposed for sale. Hence in general a hawker or pedlar. Way has many references from the Paston Letters, Tusser, and others to the 'ped,' or wicker basket. Skeat explains pedlar from a diminutive peddle, a little ped, hence through peddle-er to pedler and pedlar.

Peek, Peeke; v. Peak.

Peel, Peal, Peall, Peale.—Local, 'at the peel,' from residence at a fortified house so termed. There can be no doubt about this derivation. 'Peel, a square tower, a fortress' (Halliwell).

Geoffrey atte Pele, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 169.

Many old mansions still bear the name of 'the Peel' in the North of England. Peel Castle in Furness is well known, and no doubt 'John Peel' of Cumberland hunting celebrity got his name from that spot. The name is still well known in that county. 'Within my recollection almost every old house in the dales of Rede and Tyne was what is called a peel-house, built for securing the inhabitants and their cattle in moss-trooping times': Archaeologia Aeliana, i. 246. The surname still keeps to the North. For other variants, v. Peil and Piel.

1541. Roger Pele, parson of Dalton-in-Furness: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 213.

1577. Robert Peel, of Blackburn, co. Lanc.: Wills at Chester (1545-1620), p. 149.

Peerless, Peerless.—? Local. I cannot find the spot. No doubt this is an imitative corruption of some local surname with suffix -leys, the plural of -ley, a meadow. Mr. Lower says: 'Unequalled, referring to character' (Patr. Brit. p. 261). I cannot accept this derivation. It is altogether unsatisfactory.

1796. Married.—William Wood and Patience Peerless: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 145.

MDB. (co. Sussex), 4, 4.

Peet, Peete; v. Peat.

Penketh.—Local, 'of Penketh,' a manor in the ancient parish of Prescott, co. Lanc.

1363. Jordan de Penket, 37 Edw. III: Baines' Lanc. ii. 255.

'Thomas Penketh, the famous Scottish doctor, was a monk of the Warrington monastery (1487) . . . who, writing with Dr. Shawe in support of Richard against Edward V, brought a stain upon his order in England. He is mentioned by Shakespeare:—

"Go, Lovel, with all speed to Doctor Shaw;

Go thou [to Catesby] to Friar Penker; bid them both Meet me within this hour at Baynard's Castle": Ric. III, Act iii. sc. 5.' ibid. p. 224.

The surname was found at Warrington nearly 150 years after.

Mary Penketh, of Warrington, 1621: Wills at Chester, ii. 172.

John Penketh, of Warrington, 1630: ibid.

1570. Robert Penkeathe and Anne Brisowe: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 48. London, 1; Liverpool, 1.

Penkethman, Penkeyman.

—Nick. 'the man of Penketh,' i.e. Penketh's servant. Of this somewhat large class of surnames Matthewman (q.v.) is one of the most familiar instances. In this particular case Penketh is a local surname. The spot Penketh is mentioned frequently in Lancashire and Cheshire Records, pt. ii. (v. index of places). It is quite possible Penkethman may mean exactly what it seems to represent, 'a Penketh man,' a man from Penketh;

but this class of surname is extremely rare. v. Penketh.

Cf. Robertus Wortleyman (i.e. from Wortley), 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 170.

1581. Hammet Penketman and Isabell Browne: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 103.

Richard Penkethman, of Warrington, husbandman, 1593: Wills at Chester i. 150.

Thomas Penkethman, of Warrington, 1641: ibid. ii. 172.

Peter Penkethman, 1671: St. Mary Aldermary (London), p. 102.

The Penkeths were long settled at Warrington; v. Penketh.

Manchester, 4, 0; Liverpool, 0, 1.

Penn.—(1) Local, 'at the pen,' i.e. the pound, fold, from residence thereby; cf. Penfold, Penner. As every village and town had its pound, the name was naturally common. I could furnish many more instances.

Both parishes are represented in the above instances.

1667. Married — John Pen and Mary Chantree: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 130. London, 15; Oxford, 6; Philadelphia, 39.

Pennant.—Local, 'of Pennant,' a parish in co. Montgomery. There may have been some other spot of that name.

Philip de Penant, cos. Norf. and Suff., Hen. III—Edw. I. K.

1504. Edward Pennant, otherwise Edward ap Rees, rector of Newton, co. Norf.: FF. v. 68.

This is strongly corroborative of the Welsh origin.

London Court Dir., 1.

Pennell.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Petronilla,' which became Peter-nell, finally Pernel, Parnel, and Pennell; v. Parnall. (2) Bapt.

'the son of Painel' (v. Paynel). The three following are the children of one household:

Thomas, s. of Pethericke Pennell, 1580: Reg. St. Columb Major, p. 10.

John, s. of Pethericke Pennell, 1583: ibid. p. 12.

Zenobia, d. of Petherick Pennell, 1586: ibid. p. 13.

1671. Bapt. — Samuel, s. of Mathew Pennell: St. Mary Aldermay, p. 102.

1797. Married — Richard Burroughes and Sarah Pennell: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 164.

London, 4; Boston (U.S.), 6.

Penner.—Offic. 'the penner,' or pinder, one who impounded strayed cattle; v. Pinner and Penfold.

John le Penner, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 202.

Willelmus Penner, 1379: P. T. Howden, p. 21.

Perhaps the two following entries concern the same occupation:

Eborard Penier, co. Linc., 1273. A.

Thomas le Peniur, co. Norf., ibid.

Cf. lawyer for law-er, or sawyer for saw-er.

1793. Married — Thomas Palmer and Eliz. Penner: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 102. London, 1.

Penniger, Pennigar, Pinnegar, Pinniger, Pinnijer, Pinnigar.—Offic. 'the pennager,' an ensign-bearer. In the York Mystery, pennagers walked between the various crafts in the procession (v. Hist. and Antiquities of City of York, ii. 119).

Thomas le Penniger. E.

William le Pennager. E.

The following is a curious corruption:

1706. Buried — John Pennysan: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 275. Boston (U.S.), 9.

Penny, Penney, Pensom, Pensom. — Bapt. 'the son of Penny.' There can be no doubt, I think, about the derivation of this name. Pennysom is early found. With Pensom, cf. Ransom for Ranson, and Sampson for Sansom. If conclusive evidence were required for this derivation, we have it in the contemporaneous Penycock (cf. Wil-cock, Sim-cock, and v. Cock).

Penson, Pinson.—Bapt. 'the son of Pain' (?) ; v. Pagan and Pain. Nevertheless, v. Penny, which I believe to be the more correct derivation.

Pentecost, Pencycross.—Bapt. 'the son of Pentecost.' Originally a name given at the font to children born on the festival; cf. Whitsuntide, Nowell, Pascal, and Christmas. The name is found very early. It is almost certain that Pencycross is a corruption.

Penyon.—Bapt.; v. Pinnion.

Pepin, Pippin, Pipping.—Bapt. 'the son of Pepin'; v. Peppiatt. This royal French name made but little impression in England, and was never properly naturalized. Among the early kings of France were Pepin l'Heristal and Pepin le Bref. The g in Pipping is an excrescence, as in Jennings. See, however, Pippin for another derivation of that name.

Pepperman.—Occup. 'a dealer in pepper'; cf. Mustardman. I suspect the surname is now obsolete.

1690. Buried—A son of Andrias Pepperman: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 200.

Peppiatt, Peppiett, Peppiette, Pippet, Pippett, Pippitt.—Bapt. 'the son of Pepin,' dim. Peppiette. The personal name Pepin, common in France, made little mark on English nomenclature, and the diminutives are probably the result of later immigration; v. Pepin.

Perceval, Percival, Percivall.—Bapt. 'the son of Percival.' Instances in early registers are extremely rare. Probably the following entry concerns the name:

Robert Passingbal, co. Camb., 1273. A.
Maurice Perceval, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 248.

The varieties of spelling in church registers are amusing reading. I furnish a few instances:

Perckings.—Bapt. 'the son of Peter'; v. Parkin. The g is excrescent, as in Jennings.

Boston (U.S.), 1.

Percy.—Local, 'of Perci,' a parish and canton near St. Lo, Normandy. William de Perci is set down as a tenant in capite in Domesday in many counties, notably in York and Lincoln (Lower). Percy is one of the earliest examples of a local surname becoming a font-name. In modern times, of course, the practice has become familiar, as in the case of Sidney in England, and Chauncy and Washington in the United States.

Perowne.—Bapt. 'the son of Peter', from O.F. dim. Perron
(v. Perrin). The form Perowne was introduced into England by a French family who settled at Norwich after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. Several members of this family now occupy high positions in the Anglican Church.

foreigners) is conclusive proof of the popularity of this pet-form of Peter; v. Perowne. The g in Perring and Perrings, of course, is excrecent; cf. Jennings.

Perryman.—(1) Occup. 'the servant of Perry', i.e. Peter; v. Perry (2); cf. Matthewman and Addyman. No relation with the growth or sale of pears, or the making of perry. The following were members of one household:

Pershouse, Purshouse.—

Local, 'of the purse-house' (?), a Staffordshire name. The suffix is, of course, -house. Like Counting-house (q.v.), it probably means the office where the purser received and paid accounts for his lord.
Thus Thomas or William 'de la Purse-house' would easily originate a surname.

Pessoner.—Occup. 'le pessoner', i.e. the fisher. The pessoners and mariners went together in the York Pageant (v. York Mystery Plays, p. xx).

Egeas Fisher, alias Pessonner, was Mayor of Gloucester in 1241: Rudder's Glouc. p. 113.

Ralf le Pecimer was bailiff of Norwich in 1239: Bromefield's Norfolk, iii. 58.

A similar corruption is furnished in one of the instances below:

William le Pessonner, or Pessimar, co. Northampton, 1273. A.

Robert Pessonner, London, 20 Edw. I. R.

Richard le Pessonner, 1303. M.
Henry le Pessonner, C.

Peterman.—Occur. 'the servant of Peter'; cf. Perryman, Matthewman, or Addyman.

1601. Married—Robert Peaterman and Eliz. Ladam: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 46. Philadelphia, 42.

Peterson; v. Peter.

Pether.—Bapt. 'the son of Peter'; v. Pither.

Petherick, Pethick.—Bapt. 'the son of Patrick.' The Cornish form, I presume, of Patrick, where it still exists as a font-name. There is a parish of Little Petherick in the dioc. of Truro, probably from the patron saint.

Pethroke, son of John Trevanan, 1547: Reg. St. Columb Major, p. 4.

Pethericke, son of John Snell, 1579: ibid. p. 10.

Pethericke, son of Richard Reynolds, 1580: ibid. p. 11.

Thomas, son of Pethericke Pernell, 1580: ibid.

Thomas, son of John Pathicke, 1592: ibid. p. 16.

1789. Married—Lionel Pethick and Margaret Hanison: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 25.

London, 2, 3; MDB. (co. Cornwall), 2, 9.

Peticurteis.—Nick. for one scant of courtesy.

Walter Peticurteis, co. Oxf., 1273. A.
William Petitkorteys, co. Oxf., ibid.

Petipas, Petitpaw.—? Nick. 'Little-step,' one who stepped shortly; cf. Lightfoot, Golightly, Purchase, &c.

William Petipas, co. Camb., 1273. A.
John Petypase, co. York. W. 11.

Thomas Petipas. MM.
Boston (U.S.), 4, 1.

Petit, Petitt, Pettet, Pettit, Pettitt.—Nick. 'le petit,' the little; cf. Little and Petty.

1671. Married—Josiah Petit and Eliz. Petit: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 40.

1712. Buried.—Thomas Pettit: St. Antholin (London), p. 124.

London, 4, 1, 6, 17, 7; Philadelphia, 2, 2, 0, 44, 0.

Pett.—Local, 'of Pett,' a parish in co. Sussex.

Carolus de Pette, co. Kent, 1273. A.
1562. Married—Nicholas Charnocke and Margery Pette: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 2.

1681. Phineas Pett and Sarah Harden: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 304.

1717. Bapt.—William, s. William Pett: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 97.

London, 4.

Pettingell, Pettingell, Pettengill, Pettengill.—Local. From Portugal. 'Portingall, a Portuguese' (Halliwell); v. Pettingell; cf. Spain and Espin.

1566. Buried—John Pettingale, clothworker: Reg. St. Mary Aldermay (London).

1568. Married—Elizabeth Pettingale: ibid.

London, 1, 0, 0, 0; Boston (U.S.), 0, 1, 6, 1.

Petter, Petters, Petterson.—Bapt. 'the son of Peter,' an old dialectic form.

1538-9. Married—Petter Skreven and Alys Langlee: St. Dionis Backchurch (London).

Petter Newton: Visit. Glouc. p. 116.

1775. Married—Robert Elliot and Ann Petters or Peters: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 251.

London, 2, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 0, 2.

Pettifer, Petifer, Pettafer, Pettafor, Pettepher, Pettifor, Pettipher, Pettifor, Puddifer.—Nick. O.F. Pedefere, 'iron-footed'; cf. Dent-de-fer, 'iron-tooth'; also Brazdefer and Firebrace, 'iron-arm,' and M.E. Ironsides. Mr. Lower's 'petite-fere,' little wild beast, is very fanciful.

Patrick Pedefere, 7 Edw. III.: Freeman of York, i. 27.

Robertus Pedefere, gentil, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 277.

Bernard Pedefere. C.
Fulbert Pedefere. X.

William Pedefere. E.

By the close of the 16th century many of the modern forms had come into vogue:

William Pettifer, or Pettefer, or Pettifer, or Petyfre, 1548: Reg. Univ. Oxf. i. 216.

Robert Pettifer, Sheriff of Gloucester, 1603: Rudder's Glouc. p. 116.

The most curious corruption of all is the imitative Pottiphar:

1777. Married—Moses Pottiphar and Jane Lee: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 283.

Pharaoh (q.v.) occurs as a surname in the same register.

1633. Married—John Pettiver and Eliz. —: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 64.

1651. — Edward Pettiver and Mary Keys: ibid. p. 86.

1668. — William Faulkner and Mary Petifar: ibid. p. 147.

1703. — Samuel Pettifur and Ann Aslin: ibid. p. 226.

London, 5, 1, 1, 1, 1, 1, 1, 0; Liverpool (Puddifer), 1.

Pettingell, Pettingle, Pettengale, Pettengill.—Local, 'of Portugal,' 'a Portuguese'; v. Portingale, of which these are variants; v. Pettengell.

1622. Bartholomew Pettingall: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 412.

1791. Married—Rev. S. Smith and Susanna Pettingel: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 59.

1792. Married—Ward Pettingell and Anna Pettingel: ibid. p. 78.

MDB. (co. Cambridge), 2, o, o, o; Great Yarmouth, o, i, o, o; New York, o, o, i, 4.

Pettinger, Petinger.—Occup. A North-English form of Pottinger, q.v.

1805. Married—John Pettinger and Sarah Holmes Foster: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 335.

Manchester, 4, o; West Rid. Court Dir., 1, i; MDB. (co. Linc.), 8, o.

Petit(t); v. Petit.

Petty, Pettay, Pettee.—Nick. 'the petty,' i.e. small in stature; v. Petit. The people bearing this name in the United States have selected Pettee as a preferable form; cf. Little, Littlejohn, Small, or Smallman.

Willelmus Pete, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 286.

Robertus Petyson, 1379: ibid. p. 287. Richard Peteson, 1379: ibid. Robertus Pety, 1379: ibid. p. 49. 1602. Married—Thomas Pettie and Joane Hanson: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 26.

London, 8, o, o; Boston (U.S.), o, i, 19.

Petyclerk.—? Office.

John Peticlerk, Close Roll, 32 Edw. I. Richard Petyclerk, c. 1300. M. William Peticlerk, ibid. John Peticlerk, co. York. W. 2.

Perhaps not a nickname for small stature or meagre learning (though compare Beauchlerk and Manclerk, q.v.), but rather 'an under clergyman,' a vicar. The frequency of the name in separated districts is against the nickname theory. Again, it is significant that the French Petyclerk is met by the seeming English translation, 'Small-writer' (q.v.). A large number of such translations appear in this dictionary; cf. Handsomebody, Fairchild, Fairbrother (q.v.).

Peverall, Peverell, Pepper, pepperell, Pepperill.—? 'William Peverel was a natural son of William the Conqueror, who entered England at the Conquest.' . . . 'In Domesday it is continually spelt Piperellus. Mr. Planché (Journal of Arch. Assoc. viii. 196) conjectures that it had a personal signification, and that 'it is a corruption of Puerulus, which is almost identical with Peuerellus, as we find it written in the Anglo-Norman Pipe and Plea Rolls' (v. Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 265). This would make the meaning to be Littleboy. It does not seem satisfactory. In any case Pepperall, Pepperell, and Pepperill are variants of Peverall.

Pagan Peverel, co. Camb., 1273. A. Richard Peverel, co. Hunts, ibid. Sir Hugh le Peverel (sic), 1344: FF. xi. 53.

1757. Married—Benjamin Pepperel and Mary Grange: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 72.

1806. — George Hillem and Margaret Peverell: ibid. ii. 355.

London, 1, i, 1, 1, 1; Philadelphia, 1, o, o, o.

Peverley.—Local, a corruption of Beverley.

London, 1.

Pew.—Bapt. 'the son of Hugh,' a variant of Pugh, q.v. (In the same way Hugh is found as Hew; cf. Hew or Hewson for Hugh or Hughson.) Thus we find Pews for Pughs:

1607. Bapt.—Joan, d. John Pews: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 51.

For several instances, v. Pugh.

Hugh Pue, of Hoole, 1685: Wills at Chester (1681-1700), p. 203.

Lewis Pew, of Wigland, yeoman, 1698: ibid. p. 196.

1808. Married—Thomas Collins and Hannah Pew: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 391. London, 1; Boston (U.S.), 1.

Pewterer, Powder.—Occup. 'the pewterer,' a worker in lead and tin. 'Pewtyr, metalle': Prompt. Parv. 'Pewtrere, electuarii, vel stannarii': ibid. The Pewterers and Founders marched together in the York Pageant (York Mystery Plays, p. xx). The surname Pewterer has dropped the final er; cf. Pepper for Pepperer.

Nicholas le Peuterer, C. R., 29 Edw. III.

Henry Pewterer, temp. Eliz. ZZ. William Peuterere. S.

1795. Married—Luke Pewter and Mary Jackson: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 125.

1798. — Abraham Pewter and Mary Darby: ibid. p. 182. London, o, 4.

Pewtress.—Occup. 'the pewtress,' a female worker in lead and tin (v. Pewterer); cf. Huntress and Hunter.

1753. Married—Thomas Pewtress and Eliz. Barber: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 49. London, 2.

Peyton.—Local, 'of Peyton,' a chapelry in the parish of Bampton, co. Devon. But v. Payton.

London, 4; Philadelphia, 7.

Pharaoh, Pharoah, Pharo.—? Local. A manifest imitative corruption of some local or other surname; cf. Pottiphar (v. Pettifer). The tendency to imitate Scripture names seems to have amounted to a fascination. Probably the local Farrow is the true parent; cf. Physick for Fishwick. All the above corruptions have found their way across the Atlantic.

1655. Bapt.—Eliz., d. James Pharo: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 192.

1702. — Eliz. Pharo: St. Jas. Piccadilly, p. 22.

1763. Married—Giles Pharaoh and Sarah Vincent: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 118.

1770. — William Clark and Mary Farrow: ibid. p. 197.

London, 2, o, o; MDB. (co. Surrey), o, 1, 1; Oxford, 3, 1, o; Philadelphia, 1, 2, 2.

Pheasant.—Nick. 'the pheasant'; 'fesaunt' (Chaucer). O.F. faisan. The wilder birds were popular nicknames; cf. Partridge, Hawk, Kite, Heron.

Phethean; v. Phythian.

Phetteplace. — An American corruption of Fettiplace, q.v.; cf. Phillimore and Filmore.

Worcester (U.S.), 8.

Phesy. — Local, 'de Vesci.' For proof absolute, v. Vesey.

1578. Buried — Sara Feseye, a maiden, plague: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 195.

1788. Married — Edward Briscoe and Catherine Pheasey: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 14.

1802. — Louis Humeau and Ann Pheasy: ibid. p. 271.

— Thomas Pheasey and Mary Evans: ibid. p. 272.

London, 1.

Philbert. — Bapt.; v. Filbert.

Philbrick, Philbrook. — Local, 'of Felbrigg,' a parish in co. Norfolk, three miles from Cromer; cf. Phillimore. The variants are easily proved by the evidence given below.

Matilda de Felbregge, co. Norf., 1273. A. Roger de Felebregge, co. Norf., 20 Edw. I. R.

Robert de Fellbrigg, abbot of North Creak, co. Norf., 1412: FF. vii. 77.

1577. Married — Harrye Felbricke and Susan Sowthwicke: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 13.

1652. — John Langstone and Martha Filbrigg, widow, of Chelmsford, in Essex: ibid. p. 31.

1325. Richard de Phileby, rector of Stokesby, co. Norf.: FF. xi. 251.

1800. Married — Thomas Dennis Philbey and Jane Jones: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 215.

London, 1.

Philcox. — Bapt. 'the son of Philip,' from nick. Phil, with suffix -cock (v. Cocks); cf. Philkin, and Wilcock or Wilcox.

Ricardus Filkok, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 160.

1617. — Kathryn, d. Richard Filcock: ibid. p. 4.

London, 1; MDB. (co. Sussex), 2.

Philibert. — Bapt.; v. Filbert.

Philip, Philipp, Philipps. Philips, Philipp, Philipps, Phillips, Philipson. — Bapt. 'the son of Philip.' There is little need of instances for this batch of familiar surnames. Philip ceased to be popular as a font-name after the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth for patriotic reasons. Nevertheless its earlier predominance has given it immortality in our directories.

Simon fil. Philippi, co. Kent, 1273. A.

Philkin. — Bapt. 'the son of Philip,' from the nick. Phill (v. Philson), and the dim. Philkin; cf. Watkin from Walter, or Wilkin from William. For examples, v. Filkin, the modern form.

Robert Philkynn sailed for Barbadoes, 1635: Hotten's Lists of Emigrants, p. 52.

Phillimore, Filmore. — Nick. of endearment, 'fin amour,' pure love (v. Douceamour and Plainamour). The change of n to l was common; cf. Bannister for Ballister (v. Bannister), and banister for baluster. For instances, v. Finnemore. Ph and f interchange frequent civilities; v. Filpot for Philpot, Filbert and Philbert, Farrimond and Pharamond, &c.

1683. Married — Thomas Foster and Saray Phillmore: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 200.

Phipps, Phipson.—Bapt. 'the son of Philip,' from the nick. Phip. 'Phip, a sparrow. The noise made by a sparrow': Halliwell. I think this is not the true derivation. The sparrow went by the name of Philip (v. Philipshank), as the red-breast by the name of Robin. Phip was merely the nick. of Philip, and applied familiarly to the sparrow.

Pickard; v. Picard.

Pickavance, Pickavant, Pickvance, Pickance.—Nick. 'Prick-advance,' spur forward. We must not be tempted to refer these various forms to the pikedevant or piked beard. 'A young, pitted, wanted, trim-bearded fellow': Anatomy of Melancholy, Tegg's edit. p. 533. Found in the portraits of courtiers in the 16th and 17th centuries, it was not an early enough fashion to be immortalized by a patronymic. 'Tis true the following entry occurs:

1600. Married—John Gibbs and Joan Pikedevant: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, p. 24.

But the date itself would suffice to show that it was an imitation of the term for the then prevailing fashion. No doubt her real name was Pickavant. Prikeavant was, no doubt, the nickname of a harbinger, pursuivant, or herald, from prick; M.E. prike, to put spur to horse (cf. 'kick against the pricks,' Auth. Vers.), and avance, forward, to the front. A herald was one who 'rode to the front.' The instances amply confirm this view:

Pickernell.—Official, 'the spigurnel' (v. Spicknell), a curious corruption, but not without precedent; cf. Sturgess for Thurges, Pichfat for Spichfat, or Pilsbury for Spilsbury. Thus may an ancient and honourable name be disguised.

1769. Married—John Tillier and Ann Pickernell: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 183.

1781. —Richard Pink and Eliz. Pickernell: ibid. p. 328. London, 1.

Pickersgill.—Local, 'of Pickersgill.' Some spot in the N. Rid. of Yorks which I have failed to discover.

Pickett.—Bapt. 'the son of Picot.' Mr. Lower says, 'A well-known corruption of Pigott.' This is to reverse the true order. Pigott is a corruption of Pickett, or more correctly, Picot or Pichot. It is strange that while the name has ramified so strongly, so little can be gleaned of its history. Camden's derivation from O.F. picote, the small - pox, picote, pock - marked, freckled, is unkind; but he gave no authority for the statement. That Picot was a personal name is clear, for Picot, a chief tenant in Hampshire, and Picot de Grentebrig', both occur in Domesday. It is curious, too, to observe that two families in Cheshire, the Pigots and Pichots, ran side by side for some generations, and Dr. Ormerod long ago surmised that both sprang from one common ancestor—Gilbert Pichot, lord of Broxton (Earwaker's East Cheshire, ii. 361). Radulphus Picot (Pipe Rolls, 6 Hen. II, pp. 53, 55). Also Picot and Picotus, as a personal name (ibid. pp. 32, 46).

Pickin; v. Piggins.

Pickles, Pighills.—Local, 'of Pickhill,' a parish in the N. Rid. Yorks. I suspect this is the origin, and that there was an irresistible tendency to imitate the dictionary word on the part of the bearers of the surname. Several early entries, however, point to some small locality in the West Riding.

Ricardus de Pighkeleys, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 182.

Stephanus de Pykedleghes, 1379: ibid. p. 183.

These persons dwelt in the village of Haworth, in which district the two names are now so familiar. In this case the word means 'the meadows on the hill-top,' the owner taking his name from residence thereon; v. Pick(2). The Directory for Wilsden, W. Rid. Yorks, contains the two following names, seemingly related:

Nathan Pickles, beer-retailer.
Nathan Pighills, farmer.

It is curious to note how little the name has wandered from its native county. Nevertheless, it has reached America.

MDB. (co. Lincoln), 7.

Pickwick.—Local, 'of Pickwick' or Bickwick, some spot in the West country; cf. Buckle and Puckle, Bursar and Purser, Bickerdike and Pickerdike, &c. My earliest reference is from the county of Wilts. This is interesting. The Pall Mall Gazette (March 3, 1888) says: 'During the hearing of a case in the High Court of Justice yesterday, Mr. Dickens, a son of the famous novelist, and counsel for the defendant, said he should call as a witness a Mr. Pickwick (laughter). He added: It may interest your lordship (Baron Huddleston) to learn that this gentleman is a descendant of Mr. Moses Pickwick, who kept a coach at Bath, and I have very good reason to believe that it was from this Mr. Moses Pickwick that the name of the immortal Pickwick was taken.' Evidently the surname is a West-country one, and has existed there at least six centuries.

Pidecock, Piddocke.—Bapt. 'the son of Peter,' from Peter-cock, a corruption (v. Cocks); cf. Wilcock, Simcock, &c. Lower quotes from Burke's Landed Gentry, 'The surname is derived from the armorial bearing of the family, a pied cock!' Lower adds, 'The cock is not pied, but simply parted per fesse, Or and Argent.' This is setting the cart before the horse with a vengeance.

Pilsbury, Pillsbury.—Local, 'of Spelsbury,' a village in co. Oxford; v. Spilsbury. These corrupted forms are commonly found in the United States. I met with instances daily in the course of a tour through the States in May and June, 1888. But the correcter forms, Spilsbury and Spillsbury, are not unknown. The corruption into Pilsbury is a very natural one.

Pim, Pimm, Pymm, Pym.—Bapt, 'the son of Pimme.' Considering that Eufemia is fairly common in the Hundred Rolls, that Pimme is feminine, and Phemie is still the nick, it is all but certain that we have here the solution of the name in question. Personally I have no doubt that this derivation is correct.

Pimlott, Pimblett, Pimblott, Pimblotte, Pimlock.—Bapt. 'the son of Pim' (q.v.), dim. Pimclot; cf. Hewlett for Huelot (Hugh), &c. I have no proof of this statement. It is a name of Cheshire parentage. Of course the b in Pimblett, &c., is intrusive. In America a corrupted form, Pimlock, has sprung up; cf. Glasscott and Glasscock.

Pinkerton.—Local, 'of Puncardon.' Mr. Lower says, 'We search in vain the gazetteers of England and Scotland for any locality bearing the designation of Pinkerton.' He declares that it is a corruption of Puncardon, and asserts that Puncardon is found as Pynkerton in Ragman Roll, A.D. 1296 (Patr. Brit. p. 268). I doubt not he is right. It is believed that Puncardon is the place now called Pont-Chardon, in the arrondissement of Argentan, Normandy. In Domesday the surname is found as Ponte-Cardon. We may take it therefore that the family came into England at the Conquest (v. Patr. Brit. p. 279).

Pinkney, Pinckney.—Local, 'de Pincheni.' It is probable that the name came into England at the Conquest. Mr. Lower says that Giles de Pincheni (temp. Henry I) endowed the monks of St. Lucien, in France, with lands at Wedon, co. Northants (Patr. Brit. p. 268).

Pinn.—Local; v. Pyne.

Pinnell.—?—. I find no prefix 'de' or 'de la' to the early instances. Ralph Pinel was a tenant in capite in cos. Essex and Suffolk at the date of Domesday. Two centuries later, as will be seen below, the surname was still settled there. I cannot classify the name, but probably it is local in spite of the absence of local prefixes, and of Norman extraction.

MDB. (co. Camb.), 1; (co. Essex), 5.

Plevin.—Bapt. 'the son of Blethyn,' a Welsh personal name. The usual patronymic is Blevin, but Plevin is not without representatives (v. Blevin and Blethyn); cf. Pinnion and Benyon, Pumphrey and Boumphrey, also Welsh surnames.

Alice Plethin, alias Mayo, of the city of Chester, 1670; Wills at Chester (1660-80), p. 212.

William Plevin, of Kinnerton, 1685 : ibid. (1681-1700), p. 199.

The Manchester Courier, October 26, 1886, announces the marriage of 'George James, son of the late James Plevin, Nantwich, to Rhoda,' &c. Nantwich is near the Welsh border.

Manchester, 1.

Plews, Plues.—Bapt. Ap-Lewis (Welsh), whence Plewis, Plews, now found also as Plues. One of these latter tells me his great grandfather wrote it Plews; cf. Price, Pritchard, Ployd, &c. I lack absolute proof of the above derivation.

Griffin Lewys, or Lews, 1518: Reg. Univ. Oxf. i. 108.

1792. Married—Thomas Plews and Charlotte Boyce: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 80.

Plimsaul, Plimsoll.—Local, 'of Plemostall' (?), a parish about four miles from Chester. From Plimstall to Plimsoll would be an easy stage. I have no certain proof of this.

London, 1, 1; MDB. (co. Norf.), 1, o; Sheffield, o, 1.

Plomer; v. Plummer.

Plowden.—Local, 'of Plowden,' an estate in co. Salop. The Plowdens of Plowden Hall in that county still exist.

Manchester, 1; New York, 1.

Plowsmith.—Occup. 'the plowsmith,' a maker of ploughs. Plowright was the usual name, but we have proof that Plowsmith existed.

'Until a smith, men callen Dan Gerveis, That in his forge smithed plow-harness.'

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, 3758-9.

William le Plowsmith, Rot. Fin., 7 Edw. I.

Ployd.—Bapt. 'the son of Lloyd,' from the Welsh Ap-Lloyd. This is found in England generally as Bloyd (q.v.), in America as Ployd; cf. Breeze and Preece.

Philadelphia, 7.

Pluck.—I do not know the origin of this surname, and therefore simply confine myself to instances. Perhaps a French importation.

John Pluk, C. R., 3 Edw. IV.

1775. Married—Auguste François Pligue and Jeanne Josephine Viulley: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 249.

London, 3.

Plucknett.—Local, 'of Plukenet'; v. Plunkett, of which it is a variant.

London, 1.

Pluckrose.—Nick. This surname is as old as the 13th century. Lower suggests that it and Pullrose arose out of feudal custom. He finds them in Sussex in 1296, and in the same county knows property close to Ashdown Forest held of the Duchy of Lancaster by one red rose. The reeve of the manor comes periodically and plucks a rose from the tree (v. Patr. Brit. p. 271).

1755. Married—Francis Plumtree and Dorothy Bury: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 56.
London, 2, 0, 0; MDB. (co. Notts), 0, 1, 1.

Plumridge, Plumbridge, Plummeridge.—Local, 'at the plum-ridge.' I cannot discover the precise locality. Plumbridge is a manifest variant, the b being intrusive; cf. Plumb for Plum.

1784. Married—James Plumridge and Susanna Clarke: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 357.
London, 3, 4, 2; Oxford, 9, 1, 0; Boston (U.S.), 1, 0, 0.

Plumstead.—Local, 'of Plumstead,' a parish in co. Kent.

1771. — John Lawrence Jones and Ursula Plumstead: ibid. p. 210.
Philadelphia, 1.

Plunkett, Plunket, Plunkitt.—(1) Local, 'of Plukenet.' The same as the once great name of Plucknett (q.v.), by transference of n from the second to the first syllable. There are many such instances in this dictionary.

Jocues de Plukenet, co. Berks, 1273. A.
Jocues de Plunkenet, co. Berks, ibid.

(2) Plunk. (?) from the complexion: blanchet, blanket, white; whence blanket and plunket for a coarse woollen cloth (v. plunket, Halliwell). A statute of Richard III calls it 'plonket.' The form in Prompt. Parv. is 'plunket.' Mr. Way quotes a line from Awntyrs of Arthure:

'Hir belte was of plonkete, with birdis fulle baulde.'

Nevertheless, although some of our Plunketts may owe their name to (2), like Russell, Burnett, Blount, &c., the general derivation is undoubtedly (1).

1574-5. Edward Plunket, of Ireland: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 59.
1786. Married—Christopher Plunkett and Sarah Fimester: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 387.

Gilbert Poignant. J.
1790. Married—Albanis Beaumont and Louisa Poiguand: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 50.

Pointdexter, Poingdestre.—Nick. An heraldic term. One of the nine chief local points of an escutcheon. 'Point-dexter parted ten (in Heraldry), an abatement due to a Braggadochio': Bailey's Dictionary, 1742. John Poyndexter, Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, was dispossessed of his living in 1642 (Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy). The name still exists. 'Poingdestre and Truman, Chemists, 187 Newington Butts': London Directory.

1767. Married—John Troulliet and Eliz. Poingdestre: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 170.
London, 0, 1.

Pointer, Poynter, Pointmaker.—Occup. 'the pointer,' a maker of points. A manufacturer of tagged lace, for fastening hose and doubling together, &c. Falstaff in the act of saying, 'Their points being broken,' is interrupted by the remark, 'Down fell their hose' (1 Henry IV). The name and occupation occur in the Privy Purse Expenses, Elizabeth of York (p. 120): 'John Poyntmaker, for pointing of XL dozen points of silk pointed with agelettes of laton.' An Act passed 1 Edw. IV mentions, among others, 'Keper of oure Armour in the Toure of London, maker of poyntes, constable of oure castell of Hadleigh, &c.': Rot. Parl. Edw. IV.

Polkinghorne, Polkinhorn, Puckinghamore.—Local, 'of Polkinhorne.' An estate in the parish of Guinear, co. Cornwall.

'From this place were denominated an old family of gentlemen, surnamed Polkinhorne': Gilbert's Cornwall, ii. 152 (quoted by Lower).

Robarte Pokenghorne, 1541: Reg. St. Dionis Backchurch (London), p. 71.

1808. Married—Henry Polkinghorne and Mary Hill: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 394.

London, 0, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Cornwall), 5, 0, 2.

Pollard.—Nick. 'pollard,' one who had his hair cropped short, from poll, the head, and suffix -ard. Hence a pollard tree, a tree lopped at the top; cf. Ballard.

John Polhard, C. R., 56 Hen. III.
William Pollard, co. Camb., 1273. A.
Stephen fil. Pollard, co. Kent, ibid.

In this last case the father is simply called by his nickname, not his personal name.

London, 3; MDB. (co. Berks), 2; (co. Hants), 2; Philadelphia, 3.

Popjay, Popjoy, Pobgee, Pobjoy, Pobjay.—Nick. 'the popinjay,' the talking jay, i. e. parrot; the sobriquet of a chatterer. M.E. popingay, O.F. papegay. The n is excrement, as in Pottinger, Messenger, Clavinger. Mr. Lower has found Popjay and Popjoy still existing. The curious corruption Pobgee, however, is in the London Directory. The change from p to b seems to have occurred at the close of the 18th century.

1502. 'Item, for bringing of a popyngay to the Quene to Windesore, 13s. 4d.' Privy Purse Exp., Eliz. of York, p. 30.
Robert Papyngaye, C. R., 45 Edw. III. Richard Popyngay. TT.

Of the Popinjay Inn at Norwich, Blomefield writes:

'The middle messuage belonged to the prior and convent, and the other two messuages in 1330 to Roger Papinjay, in whose family it continued till Roger Papinjay, his grandson, turned the corner house into an inn, and in allusion to his own name made it the sign of the "popinjay, or great green parrot, from which time it hath been a publick-house to this day, it now being the Popinjay Tavern" FF. iv. 117.

'Richard Popynjay, surveyor of the works at Portsmouth, July 8, 1568: Rec. Office, Cal. State Papers (Domestic), i. 311.

1759. Married—William Popjoy and Mary Maynard: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 84.
1770.—John Francis Popejoy and Mary Freeman: ibid. p. 200.

1784.—James Popjoy and Margaret Harris: ibid. p. 366.

From this latter the transition to the Pobgee of the London Directory is easy.

Poppewell, Poppwell.—Local, 'of Poppewell,' lit. 'the well by the poplar-tree.' Provincial English, 'popple, a poplar-tree' (Halliwell); cf. Poppleton. The spot Poppewell must be sought for in the immediate neighbourhood of Heckmondwike, W. Rid. Yorks.

Thomas Popilwell, of Cleckheaton, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 182.
Johannes de Popilwell, of Heckmondwike, 1379: ibid. p. 185.

Curious to note, there are two Poppewells in the Heckmondwike Directory of to-day.

1563. Buried—Betteris (Beatrice) Poppewell, servant to Robert Diconson: St. Antholin (London), p. 16.

1771. Married—Richardson Warburton and Ann Poppewell: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 209.

London, 4, 0; West Rid. Court Dir., 6, 0; Philadelphia, 1, 1.

Porch, Portch.—Local, 'at the porch,' M.E. porche, a covered entrance or portico. Probably a door-keeper, or doorward; v. Dorward.

Richard atte Porche, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III.: Kirby's Quest, p. 218.

Stephen atte Porche, C. R., 43 Edw. III.

This surname seems to have become corrupted into Porridge:

1601. Bapt.—Anne, d. Simon Porridge: St. Antholin (London), p. 40.

1657. Married — Robert Porch and Elizabeth Barton: St. Mary Aldermary, p. 27.

It is interesting to notice that Mr. R. B. Porch played for Somerset v. Essex, and carried out his bat for 85, July 11, 1885.

Posnett.—Local, 'of Postlethwaite.' This familiar Cumberland and Furness surname is abbreviated to Poslett in colloquial intercourse. It is frequently so registered. By the common change from l to n, Poslett has become Posnett; cf. baluster and banister. v. Postlethwaite.

Gerard Postlet, of Dalton, 1596: Lanc. Wills at Richmond, i. 218.

William Postlet, of Marton, 1597: ibid.

In the Ulverston Church Registers it is found as Postlat.

Philadelphia, 2.

Possellwhite.—Local. A corruption of Postlethwaite, q.v.; cf. Applewhite for Applethwaite.

John Postelwaite, of Kirkbie, 1587: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 218.

1766. Married—Richard Postlewhite and Ann Terry: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 154. London, 1.

Postill, Postel, Postol.—Nick. 'the Apostle'; cf. Bishop, Archbishop, &c. For lapse of initial vowel, cf. Potticary for apothecary. Halliwell (s.v. Postle) quotes:

'Like a postle I am,
For I preche to man.'

Armonye of Byrdes, p. 7.

'Posteles,' Piers Plowman, B. vi. 151 (Skeat). A.S. form apostol (ibid.).

1679. John Postle, of Lodmore Lane: Wills at Chester (1660-80), p. 214.

Probably the local Postlethwaite refers to the settlement or clearing of some early apostle or preacher, who had found his way into Cumberland. Cf.

Richard de Postelcumbe, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

William de Postelcumbe, co. Oxf., ibid. London, 2, 0, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 2, 1.

Postlethwaite.—Local, 'of Postlethwaite.' I cannot discover the spot. There can be little doubt that the surname originally arose on the Cumberland side of the Duddon, and advanced eastward into Furness. To this day it is an established Furness name; v. Postill for probable origin. For suffix, v. Thwaites.

1546. Buried—Richard Postlethwaite: Reg. Ulverston Church, p. 3.

1547. Married—William Postlethwait and Sebrell Asburner: ibid. p. 5.

1587. John Postlethwayt, co. Westm.: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 161.

Pottle.—Bapt. 'the son of Potel,' i.e. Philip, from Pot (the nick. of Philipot), dim. Pot-el; v. Potts, Pottin, and Potkin. Once more in such a surname as this we see the early and widespread influence of the apostolic name of Philip.

Potts, Pott.—Bapt. 'the son of Philip,' dim. Philipot or Philpot, whence nick. Pot (v. Potkin). The frequency of Potts as a surname (see London Directory) is owing to the once great popularity of the apostolic name. The Spanish Armada and the marriage of Mary with Philip ruined the prospects of Philip at the font as much as the Gunpowder Plot ruined the name of Guy. Cf. the French importation Potelette in the London Directory, evidently a diminutive formed on the nick. Pot. The Hundred Rolls have 'John Potin, co. Kent,' another diminutive (cf. Col-in from Nicholas) which corresponds with Coppin (q.v.), a dim. of Cob, the last syllable of Jacob or Jacop.

Power.—Nick. 'the poor.' Although a great name, there can, it seems to me, be no doubt as to the derivation of the name. All the early entries point to one and the same source. Probably the vow of poverty would give the devotee such a sobriquet among his friends, and the title would be proudly borne; cf. Barefoot. v. Pauper and Poore. Poynter.—Occup.; v. Pointer.

Poynton, Pointon, Poynting, Pointing.—Local, 'of Poynton,' a chapelry in the parish of Prestbury, near Stockport, co. Ches. Poynting, &c., is a corruption, the g being an excrescence, as in Jennings. For another local origin, v. Pointing. Both have become inextricably mixed.

Pranker.—Bapt. 'the son of Prankard.' Perhaps a variant of Punchard, q.v.

William Praucard (sic), co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 199.

Probably a misprint for Prancard. Close by in the same roll occurs Agnes Punchard (p. 200).

MDB. (co. Soms.), 5.

Pratt.—Bapt. 'the son of Prat' (?). It seems strange that the origin of this surname should be in any doubt. No less than thirty Prats are mentioned in the Hundred Rolls (1273), proving a very early popularity. In no single case, however, is there any prefix de, or de la, or atte, pointing to a local derivation. I see no other conclusion than that it was a personal name. Sprat or Sprot was, we know, a familiar personal name at the same period. Mr. Lower suggests that as the surname Meadow is Latinized into 'de Prato' in early registers, Pratt is a 'contraction.' This is utterly beside the mark.

Pretious, Precious.—Bapt. 'the son of Precious' (i.e. dear). Mr. Lower writes of this Yorkshire surname, 'A correspondent sends me the following anecdote: "Walking through a town with a friend, I noticed the name of Precious. My friend said to me, "You knew John Priesthouse; he was the father of this Precious." Here the vulgar had corrupted the name, probably in ridicule of Priesthouse." Whatever truth may attach to this story communicated to Mr. Lower, it does not alter the fact that the surname Pretious or Precious is descended of a personal name Precious or Preciosa, as it was sometimes found in formal documents.

Preciosa Potewyne, co. Camb., 1272. A. Preciosa de Kirkeby: Pat. Roll, 13 Edw. III.

Preciosa Scherwynd, wehester, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 98.

1739. Married—James Bickett and Mary Precious: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 24. London, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Suffolk), 0, 2; (East Rid. Yorks.), 0, 5.

Prett; v. Pritt.

Prettyjohn, Prettejohn.—Nick. 'Prettyjohn.' But possibly an English corruption of the French Petit-jean. John was so very common in the 13th and 14th centuries, that such nicknames as Littlejohn, Properjohn, or Micklejohn were given in order to secure identity.

1530. 'Item, . . . paid to petit-John and his fellows in rewarde by the Kinges commandment': Privy Purse Exp., Hen. VIII, p. 52.
London, 0, 1.

Prettyman, Pretymán.—? Nick. 'the prettyman' (?), i.e. the comely or clever one (v. pretty in Skeat's Dict.). A surname of East Anglian parentage; still found in co. Suffolk. The name has flourished across the Atlantic.

1631. Peter Prettman, co. Norf.: FF. i. 392.

1635. William Prettman, rector of Hilburgh, co. Norf.: ibid. vi. 115.

1669. Married—Thomas Prittman and Margaret Banes: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 168.

MDB. (co. Suffolk), 3, 0; London, 0, 1; Philadelphia, 22, 0.

Prevost, Provost, Provis, Provost.—Official, 'the provost,' i.e. the prefect, the chief magistrate, or mayor of a town. Commonly entered as Prepositus in the Hundred Rolls. O.F. provost, or prevost.

Pritchard; v. Pritchard.

Prichett.—Bapt. A variant of Pritchard or Pritchard; cf. Prickett for Prickard; v. Pritchard. The form Prichett, without the t, seems peculiar to the United States.

Philadelphia, 10.

Prickard.—Bapt. Ap-Rickard, a variant of Pritchard, q.v.; cf. Rickard and Richard (v. Prickett). MDB. (co. Radnor), 3.

Prickett, Prickitt.—(1) Bapt. Ap-Richard (Welsh), i.e. the son of Richard. Just as Richard is met by the harder Rickard, so is the Welsh Prichard met by the harder Prickard (q.v.). And just as Pritchard or Prichard became corrupted into Pritchett and Pritchitt, so also did Prickard become corrupted into Prickett and Prickitt. The origin is thus simple enough.

(2) Nick. 'the prickett,' a buck in his second year; cf. Buck, Staggs, Roebuck, &c.

'Weele haunt the trembling prickets as they rome
About the fields, along the hauthorne bushes.'

The Affectionate Shepherd, 1594.
'And I say beside that 'twas a prickett that the princess killed': Love's Labour's Lost, Act iv. Sc. 2.

Mr. Lower says, 'The crest of the family is allusive, being "a prickett—tripping, proper"': Patr. Brit. p. 277.

Richard Pricket, co. Derby, 1273. A.

The above, of course, represents (2), not (1).

1793. Married—William Prickett and Hannah Weston: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 91.

London, 2, 1; MDB. (co. Pembroke), 1, 0; Philadelphia, 5, 7; New York, 0, 3.

Prickhorse.—Nick. 'prick-horse,' a sobriquet for a hot rider, equivalent to Hotspur; cf. Touchprick.

Johannes Prikehors, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 217.

Priddy, Pridee.—Local, 'of Priddy,' a parish in co. Somerset, four miles from Wells. The surname is familiar to the district. Not to be confounded with Prideaux.

1792. Married—Abraham Priddy and Mary Pain: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 73.

1805. — Thomas Flint and Ann Priddy: ibid. p. 334.

London, 2, 0; MDB. (co. Somerset), 1, 0; (co. Wilts), 3, 0; Boston (U.S.), 0, 1.

Pride, Pryde.—(1) Local, 'of Pride.' Some spot seemingly in co. Devon. (2) Nick. 'Pride,' probably the sobriquet of one who took the part of Pride in an early Mystery Play. But it may have been a nickname affixed on one of a haughty demeanor.

Prideaux.—Local, 'of Prideaux.' 'The ancient family of Prideaux trace their descent from Paganus, lord of Prideaux Castle, in Luxilion, co. Cornwall, in the time of William I': Shirley's Noble and Gentle Men (quoted by Lower). There is no doubt Prideaux gave name to the family of Prideaux. They are early found in the neighbouring county of Devon.

Pridham.—Nick. A variant of Prudhomme; q.v.

Priest; v. Prest.

Priester; v. Prester.

Priestfather.—Nick. 'the father of the priest.'

Walter Prestfadre, Close Roll, 11 Edw. III. pt. ii.

Priestknave.—Occup. 'the priest's knave,' i.e. the servant of the priest.

1564. Bapt.—Elizabeth Presteknave: Reg. Prestbury, co. Ches., p. 13.

1565. Married—John Presteknave and Anne Duncalfe: ibid. p. 17.

Priestley, Priestlay, Priestly.—Local, 'of Priestley' (i.e. the priest's meadow), some small estate in the near neighbourhood of Bradford, W. Rid. Yorkshire. The surname is familiar in all English-speaking countries. But other spots would bear the same name.

Walter Prestlegh, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III.: Kirby's Quest, p. 132.

The two following lived in Hipperholme, near Bradford:

Elena de Presteley, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 194.

Priestman.—Occup. 'the priest's man,' i.e. the servant of the priest; cf. Matthewman, Addyman, Priorman, Monkman. Nevertheless, it may be an augmentative as in Masterman, merchantman, husbandman, &c. The former is by far the most satisfactory derivation.

London, 9, 1; Philadelphia, 9, o.

Prothero, Protheroe, Prothroe, Prytherch, Prytherat, Prythuch.—Bapt. Ap-Rhydderch, Welsh. The English form would be Roderickson. Some remarks on this name will be found in Miss Yonge's History of Christian Names (ii. 370).

Evan Phrydderch, co. Carnarvon, 1617: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 366.

A note is appended by the editor to say that he was the son of Roderic Evans, of Llanor, co. Carnarvon. Thus after the Welsh custom he became Evan Ap-Roderic or Phrydderch; v. Rhydderch.

- William Prythergh, or Prothergh, or Protherough, Jesus Coll. B.C.L., 1580-1: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 99.

The above entry supplies the stages by which Prothero or Protheroe was reached. The fact that the individual concerned was at Jesus College practically settles his nationality.

1740. Married—John Bannister and Mary Proud: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 25.
1802. — John Skinner and Eliz. Prout: ibid. ii. 270.
London, 2; Philadelphia, 5.

Proudfellow.—Nick. 'the proud fellow'; cf. Longfellow, also a Yorkshire surname, and Goodfellow.

Rogerus Proudefelawe, 1379: P. T. Howdenshire, p. 6.

Proudfoot, Proudfit.—Nick. One who walked with a haughty step.

Thomas Proudfoot, co. Hunts, 1273. A.
John Protfit, co. Oxf., ibid.
Robert Prudefoot, co. York, ibid.

A common entry in the Hundred Rolls—evidently a familiar and colloquial term for a haughty man.

William Proudfoot. H.
Richard Prudfoot: Close Roll, 27 Hen. III. pt. i.
Agnes Proudefote, 1379: P. T. Howdenshire, p. 17.
1801. Married—John Proudfoot and Eliz. Sparks: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 244.

In the United States this surname is occasionally found in the corrupted form of Proudfit.

London, 4, o; New York, 2, 2.

Proudlove.—Nick.; cf. Phillimore, Sweetlove, &c. This surname seems to have had South Lancashire and East Cheshire as its chief habitat.

Wylliam Proudlove, Manchester, 1541: Lanc. and Ches. Rec. Soc. vol. xii. p. 139.

1802. Married—John Skinner and Eliz. Prout: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 270.
London, 8; Philadelphia, 3.

Provis, Provost; v. Prevost.

Prowse, Prouse, Pruce.—Local (?), 'of Pruce,' i.e. of Prussia. If this be the origin, then the prefix le should be de in the Hundred Roll instances furnished below—a common error.

'And som wol have a Pruce shield or a targ.' Chaucer, C. T. 2124.
Richard le Prouz, co. Devon, 1273. A.
William le Prouz, co. Devon, ibid.
William Prous, co. Oxf., ibid.
1758. Married—Edward McLean and Mary Prowse: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 79.
London, 6, 2, 1; MDB. (Devon), 3, 2, o.

Prudhomme, Pridham, Proudman (?), Prudame, Pruden (?).—Nick. 'Prudhomme.' An old name for a superior craftsman; 'a good and true man, a man well versed in any art or trade': Sadler Green (Hist. Eng. People, i. 223), speaking of the conflict between the Merchant Guilds and the Crafts Guilds, says: 'It is this struggle, to use the technical terms of the time, of the 'greater folk' against the 'lesser folk,' or of the 'commune,' the general mass of the inhabitants, against the 'prud-hommes,' or 'wiser' few, which brought about . . . the great civic revolution of the 13th and 14th centuries.' The surname was common at the same period.

John Prodhomme, co. Devon, 1273. A.
Richard Prodhom, co. Bucks, ibid.
Geoffrey Prodhomme, or Prodomme, co. Bucks, ibid.

Many other early instances might be given, but these are sufficient. Pruden doubtless is a corruption. Pridham is found as Prudham in the 13th century.

Symon Prudham, co. Norf., 1277: FF. x. 244.

1780. Married—Richard Bunn and Eliz. Prudden: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 27. London, 0, 3, 2, 0, 1; Philadelphia, 0, 1, 1, 0, 3.

Pruitt.—Nick. 'the proud'; v. Prewett.

Prust.—Offic. 'the prust.' Doubtless a form of Priest. A.S. preost. v. Prest.

Thomas le Prust, co. Oxf., 1273. A.
Henry Prust, co. Oxf., ibid.
Robert Prust, co. Oxf., ibid.
1804. Married—Stephen Prust (co. Glouc.) and Sarah Summers: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 304.
London, 4; MDB. (Devon), 7.

Pryor.—Offic.; v. Prior.

Prytherat, Prytherch.—Bapt.; v. Prothero.

Puckridge.—Local, 'of Puckridge,' a hamlet in the parish of Standon, co. Hertford.

1709. Bapt.—James, s. Richard Puckridge: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 48.

1775. Married—Robert Anderson and Susanna Puckridge: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 256.
London, 7.

Puddephatt, Puddefoot, Puddifoot.—Nick. (?). The surname is first found in co. Bucks. It is well known there to-day.

Walter Podestat, co. Bucks, 1273. A.
1755. Married—John Puddephatt, of Berkhamsted, co. Herts, and Mary Bedford: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 50.

1785.—John Breech and Mary Puddephatt: ibid. p. 376.
London, 1, 1, 1; MDB. (co. Bucks), 3, 0, 0.

Puddifer.—Nick.; v. Pettifer.

Puddle.—Local, 'at the puddle,' from residence thereby. M.E. podel, a muddy pond.

1667-8. Bapt.—Elizabeth, d. Nathaniel Pudsey: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 233.

MDb. (North Riding Yorks), 1.

Pugh.—Bapt. 'Ap-Hugh' (Welsh), i.e. 'the son of Hugh,' of which an early form was Hew. The better class Welsh seemingly began to adopt the English style in the 17th century. William Ap-Hugh, of the parish of Llanegfan, co. Anglesey, gentleman, by will dated May 18, 1665, bequeathed legacies to his brother Edmund Ap-Hugh, and to his sons Hugh Hughes, and Henry Hughes. The will is printed in N. and Q., Sept. 3, 1887 (p. 186). For a variant, v. Pew.

London, 23; Boston (U.S.), 6.

Puleston.—Local, 'of Puleston'; v. Pilson. Perhaps the following represents the place:

Roger de Pynelesdon, co. Salop, 1273. A.

MDb. (co. Salop), 1.

Pulford.—Local, 'of Pulford,' a parish in co. Chester, five miles from Chester.

1590. Randall Pulford, co. Denbigh: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 181.

London, 4; MDB. (Suffolk), 1; New York, 1.

Pullen, Pullan, Pullein, Pulleng, Pulleyn, Pullin, Pulling.—Nick. 'le Pullen.' If pullen was used in the singular as well as plural sense, the origin of this not uncommon surname is very obvious, and is synonymous with 'chicken,' and takes its place in the class of poultry and bird nicknames; cf. Duck, Drake, Jay, Nightingale, &c. In a note to pullayly (Prompt. Parv. p. 416) Mr. Way quotes the use of pullen for poultry by Tusser; also pullayne by Palsgrave. He adds, 'Gerarde observes that in Cheshire they sow buck-wheat for "their cattell, pullen, and such like."'

Nicholas le Pullen, co. Salop, 1273. A.

Richard Puleyn, co. Dorset, ibid.

John Polayn, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 124.

Nicholas Polayn, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid. p. 210.

The g in Pulleng and Pulling is, of course, excrement, as in Jennings and a hundred other names. The forms Pullan (8), Pullein (1), Pullen (2), Pullin (1), Pullon (3), and Pullyen (1) occur in the W. Rid. Court Directory. As Paulin (or Powlin) was so common a font-name in co. York and elsewhere, it is probable that many of the above are of baptismal origin. If so, v. Paulin.

London, 33, 1, 1, 1, 1, 4, 6.

Pulley, Pooley, Polley, Poley.—Local, 'of Pooley,' i.e. the islet in the pool; cf. Pooley Bridge on Ulleswater. M.E. pol or pole, a pool. The forms Polhey and Polhay, however, suggest a different origin, i.e. the enclosed pool. But it is impossible to separate the two. They have become as surnames inextricably mixed.

Peter de Poleye, co. Herts, 1273. A. William de Poleye, co. Bucks, ibid. Ralph de Polhay, or Poley, co. Essex, ibid. Elyas de Polhey, or Poleye, co. Essex, ibid. George Polley, or Pooley, vicar of Attleborough, co. Norf., 1516: FF. i. 524. London, 5, 9, 4, 2; Philadelphia, 3, 5, 0, 6.

Pullin(g; v. Pullen.

Pullinger.—Occur. A corruption of Bullinger, q.v.; cf. Peverley for Beverley, &c. This form has ramified strongly in the United States.

1769. Married—John Twidd and Rebecca Pullinger: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 186.

London, 1; Philadelphia, 18.

Pullman, Pulman.—Occur. 'the pool-man,' a resident by the pool; cf. Bridgman, Stileman.

1617. Bapt.—William, s. John Pulman: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 77.

1803. Married—John Gill and Sarah Pullman: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 292.

1805.—John Pulman and Ann Evans: ibid. p. 323.

London, 1, 5; Philadelphia, 4, 0.

Pumphrey, Pumfrey.—Bapt. 'the son of Humphrey.' Welsh Ap-Humphrey; cf. Price, Probert, Prodger, &c.

Punch.—Nick. (?). I cannot explain this name. Halliwell has 'punch, short, fat'; and Little, Short, Fatt, &c., are well-known surnames. Punch may belong to this class of sobriquets.

Robert Punche, co. Oxf., 1273. A.

Philip Punche, co. Suff., ibid.

Roger Punch, temp. Hen. III. T.

John Punche, yeoman of the crown. H. 1809. Married—Benjamin Punch and Mary Norris: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 408.

London, 1; Boston (U.S.), 9.

Punchard, Puncher, Pinchard.—Local, 'de Ponte-cardon' (Domesday). Probably from Pont-Charidon, in the arrondissement of Argentan, Normandy, as suggested by Lower. The family gave the suffix to Heanton Punchardon, co. Devon. We may fairly surmise that Punchard is a contraction, Puncher and Pinchard being corruptions of the second stage. v. Pinkerton.

Robert de Punchard, co. Southampton, Hen. III.—Edw. I. K.

Richard de Punchardon, co. Southampt., ibid.

The above pair are placed together as if members of the same family.

Robert de Punchardun, co. Devon, Hen. III.—Edw. I. K.

Nicholas de Punchardon, 1323: Hodgson's Northumberland, v. 303.

1681. Married—Robert Reeves and Mary Puncher: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 192.

London, 2, 1, 1; Boston (U.S.), 2, 0, 0.

Puncheon; v. Punshon.

Punderson.—Nick. 'the son of the pounder' (v. Pounder); cf. Taylorson, Clerkson, Herdson.

MDB. (North Riding Yorks), 1.

Punshon, Pinchin, Pinching, Pingeon, Puncheon.—Bapt. 'the son of Puncun,' or 'Pincun,' a Norman personal name, not a corruption of Punchardon, as suggested by Lower. Representatives are found in every 13th century register.

Punt.—Local, 'at the punt,' from residence beside the punt, a kind of boat; cf. Shipp. The word was in early use.

Martin del Punt, Fines Roll, 11 Edw. I. 1579. George Punte and Margery Goslinge: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 92. London, 1; Philadelphia, 1.

Punter.—Occur. 'the punter,' one who worked a punt; v. Punt. The only other possible derivation is Punder (i.e. Pounder, q.v.), sharpened into Punter. Punder for Pounder is found below, and this might easily become Punter. Perhaps this is the true solution.

William Punter, C. R., 3 Hen. IV. pt. ii. 1557. William Puntare: Reg. Univ. Oxf. pt. ii. p. 17.

1586. Married—George Punter and Alice Manning: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 235.

London, 2.

Puzey; v. Pusey.

Pyatt.—Nick.; v. Pyett.

Pybus.—Local, 'of the pyke-busk' (?), i.e. the bush on the pike, that is, the hill. Until absolutely conclusive evidence is shown to the contrary, I cannot doubt my conclusion. The surname is a Yorkshire one, and with the entry below no other interpretation can be accepted.

Quadling; v. Quodling.

Quaife.—?—? Mr. Lower, knowing cos. Kent and Sussex well, says that this name was spelt 'Coif and Coyfe, 150 years ago, both in East Sussex and West Kent.' I suppose it is a nickname from the dress of one of the mediaeval ecclesiastical or monastical orders; v. Capron or Chapron for an exactly similar instance.

1701. Bapt.—Catherine, d. John Quoif, of ye Padocke: Canterbury Cathedral, p. 22.

1761. Married—David Coyfe (co. Middlesex) and Ann Fry: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 107.

Quail, Quaille, Quayle.—(1) Nick.; a bird, the quail.

John Quaille, C. R., 30 Edw. III.

(2) Bapt. A Manx surname. It has crossed into Lancashire, 'contracted from Mac-Phail, Paul's son. This is one of the most widely distributed names in the Island. Early forms are Mac Quayle, Quayle, 1540; Quale, 1602; Quaille, 1604; Quail, 1656.' v. The Manx Note Book, i. 134; cf. Quirk.

1793. Married—Edward Hickmott and Jane Quayle: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 93. London, 5, o, o; Liverpool, o, 2, 18; Philadelphia, 6, o, 3.

Quaint, Quant.—Nick. 'the Quaint,' that is, neat or spruce. O. F. coint, 'quaint, . . . spruce, brisk, trim': Cotg.

'And of Achilles for his quaint speere.' Chaucer, C. T. 10553.

1707. Married—Dows Quant and Frances Johnson: ibid. iii. 229.

MDB. (co. Linc.), o, 1.

Quaintance.—? Nick. 'the acquaintance'; cf. Friend, Neighbour, &c. This is Mr. Lower's suggestion, and I see no difficulty in accepting his view. I cannot find any English instance, although he writes of it as an English surname. It has crossed the Atlantic.

Philadelphia, 1.

Quaintrell, Quantrell, Queintrell.—Nick.; v. Cantrell, of which these are variants.

Quarles.—Local, 'of Quarles.'

'An extra-parochial district in the Hundred of North Greenhoe, co. Norfolk': Lower.

'Richard Quarles, husbandmon nuper de Weveton in Com. Norfolk,' 17 Hen. VII: HHH. p. 135.

The above-named was at this time settled at Beverley, co. York.

Francis Quarles, the sacred poet, was born in 1592 at Romford in Essex, a distance from Quarles not far for a surname to travel. There need be no hesitation in deciding that this is the original home of the family.

'Half a fee formerly held by Robert de Quarles, in Quarles, but now by Edmund de Baconesthorp': FF. v. 146.

Quarrington.—Local, (1) 'of Quarrington,' a township in the parish of Kelloe, near Durham; (2) a parish in co. Lincoln, near Sleaford.

1726. Married.—Joseph Patterson and Ann Quarrington: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 2. London, 1; Crockford, 1.

Quartermain, Quartermaine, Quarterman.—Nick. 'four hands.' It is possible the name is local, but I find no trace of such an origin.

Quayle; v. Quail.

Queen.—(1) Nick, 'the Queen'; cf. King, &c. (2) Bapt. A variant in America of Quinn; cf. McQueen for McQuinn. In the Philadelphia Directory I find seven McQueens and two McQuinns. With (2) this dictionary has nothing to do. The following references relate to (1), the nickname.

The following entries are interesting:

Johannes Queneson, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 55.

Alicia Queneson, 1379: ibid.

This is good evidence that Queen was a nickname for one who acted as Queen of the May, &c. The sobriquet stuck and became the surname. Kingson arose in a similar way, only that survives and Queeneson is gone.

Queintrell; v. Quaintrell.

Quelch.—Local, 'the Welsh,' i.e. the Welshman. Cf. Gwyllim for William, Quilliams for Williams, and Qwhitelaw for Whitelaw, and v. Whitehead. In the instances below an intermediate form Gwelch is given:

1612. Thomas Quilche and Mary Welam: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 12.

William Quelch, 1613: St. Mary Aldermay, p. 13.

1655. Married.—Henry Quelch and Jane Collins: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 259.

Margaret Quelch, 1688: ibid. p. 327.

These last two entries refer to the same person.

London, 3; Oxford, 8; Boston (U.S.), 1.

Quennell, Quinnell.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Quenilda' or 'Quenild,' the Norman form of Gunnilda, already resident in England before the Conquest. Miss Yonge has an interesting account of Gunhild or Gunnilda (ii. 316), but she is mistaken in saying, 'After the Conquest Gunhild died away in England.' It was fairly popular for three centuries in both the Danish as well as the Norman dress; v. Gunnell.

There are eight Gonnilds to one Quenild in one single township in 1273; v. Hundred Rolls, vol. ii. pp. 354-5. It is needless to say that Quenild would be sure to become Quennell.

(2) Local. Mr. Lower suggests that Quennell is the French Quenel, equivalent to our English Oak or Oakes. In some instances this may be quite possible. Nevertheless (1) must be considered the general parent.

1602. Robert Quennell, or Quennyl, co. Surrey: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 262.

Quickfall.—Local. A corruption of Wigfall, q.v.; cf. Quixley for Whixley; v. Quarton.

1794. Married—John Quickfall and Ann Wyatt: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 111.
West Rid. Court Dir., 1; MDB. (co. Lincoln), 3.

Quickley, Quigley.—? —. Seemingly an Irish name. In the Boston Directory there are eight Michael and ten Patrick Quigleys. Evidently Quickley is a sharpened variant.

1793. Married—John Quickly and Susanna Bort: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 99.
Manchester, 1, 2; Boston (U.S.), o, 96.

Quickman.—Nick, 'the quick man,' lively, energetic; v. Quick, and cf. such double forms as Merry and Merriman, Long and Longman, &c.

Quickman as a surname may still exist, but I cannot find any instances.

Quiddington.—Local, 'of Quiddington.' I cannot find the spot. But evidently it must first be looked for in co. Surrey.

1594-5. Married—Stockdall Quedington and Frances Ismangle, of Rigate in Surrey: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 13.

1764. Married—Henry Quittenton, of Titsey, co. Surrey, and Eleanor Hincklen: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 137.

A note appended by the editor says:

'Son of John Quiddington, baptized at Titsey, Nov. 26, 1743.'

Quince.—? —. Mr. Lower says 'the same as Quincey,' but furnishes no evidence. I cannot arrive at any satisfactory conclusion. The original form seems to have been Quinch.

1454. Jeffery Quinch, sheriff of Norwich: FF. iii. 165.

Quinn; v. Quin.

Quinnell; v. Quennell.

Quinsey; v. Quincy.

Quintin, Quentin.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Quentin.' Quentin became a somewhat popular personal name in Scotland, and has been immortalized by Walter Scott. It was still familiar in the 17th and 18th centuries, but is gradually losing ground.

Quintinus Poulet, Patent Roll, 7 Hen. VII.

Quintine Rostledge, 1617: VVV. p. 440.
Quintine Foster, 1618: ibid. p. 443.

(2) Local, 'of St. Quentin,' on the Somme, called after the missionary martyred there in 287. It was he who caused the Quentin mentioned above to be a popular baptismal name. Probably the 'St.' was occasionally dropped, as seems to have been the case in several instances below.

1647. Married—Thomas Quintin and Ann Tunstall: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 81.

It is clear that (1) rather than (2) is in general the chief parent. But both are now practically lost in Quinton, q.v.

Philadelphia, 4, 2.

Quinton.—Local, 'of Quinton.' Parishes in cos. Northampton and Gloucester.

Richard de Quenton, co. Northampt., 1273. A.

1729-30. Married—John Quinton and Eliz. Walker: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 63.

London, 7; Philadelphia, 8.

Quirk.—Bapt. A Manx surname, being a contraction of Mac Cuirc, i.e. Corc's son. McQuyrke, Quyrke, 1511; Queerke, 1601; Quirk, 1641 (Manx Note Book, ii. 60). v. Quail.

1590. Married—Richard Querck and Jane Palnes: St. Antholin (London), p. 34.

1623. William Querke, living in Virginia: Hotten's Lists of Emigrants, p. 188.
P. Crockford, 4; Liverpool, 9; Philadelphia, 33.

Quixley.—Local, 'of Quixley,' now Whixley, a parish in the dioc. of Ripon, called Quixley in P. T. Yorks. 1379; v. Quarton.

Johannes de Quixley, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 227.

Quodling, Quadling, Codling.—Nick, 'Cœur-de-lion,' lion-hearted.

Robert Querdelioun, C. R., 2 Edw. III. pt. i.

Ralph Querdelioun. T.
William Querdelioun, London. X.

By the middle of the 15th century the form assumed was Querdeling. In 1433 John Querdeling occupied a magisterial position in Norwich. Of him or an immediate descendant a rhyme is quoted:

'Whoso hath any quarrel or ple,
If he but withstand John Hankey,
John Qwerdlyng, Nic. Waleys, John Belagh, John Meg,
Sore shall him rewe,
For they rule all the Court with their lawes newe.'

FF. iii. 145.

Later on it became Codling or Codlin (q.v.), but even to this day in Norfolk and Suffolk Quodling or Quadling exists as a surname. No doubt Richard I made the sobriquet popular. I had the pleasure of pointing out in Notes and Queries (1888) that codling, an apple, is the same word as cœur-de-lion (sound to the core), the same intermediate stages having been gone through. 'Querdeling, appulle, duricenum': Prompt. Parv.

'In July come . . . plumes in fruit, ginnitings, quadlins': Bacon, Essay 46 (Of Gardens).

R

Raban.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Raban,' i.e. Raven, a popular personal name in the 12th century (v. Raven). O.H.G. hraban, a raven (v. Skeat's Dict.). It is curious to note that the only modern instances of the surname I have seen are in Somersetshire and Gloucestershire, in which latter county we find Raban a personal name as long as eight centuries ago. This must be ranked amongst the curiosities of nomenclature.

'Raban the Englishman gave land to the Church of St. Peter, Gloucester, c. 1150': Atkyns' Hist. Glouc. p. 73.

(2) Local, 'de Raban.'

Rackstraw, Rextrew.—? Local. This surname is still familiar to Lancashire and Yorkshire, where it has flourished for centuries. I suggested in my English Surnames, 2nd edit., p. 483, that it was a nickname for a scavenger or dust-heap searcher, quoting Piers Plowman's 'ratoner and rakyer of Cheape,' i.e. rat-catcher and scavenger of Cheapside. I have grown more careful as I have proceeded in my studies, and feel sure it is a local surname, but I cannot find the spot.

1628. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Edward Rakestraw: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 110.

1632. Married.—Arthur Swann and Mary Rakestrawe: ibid. p. 64.

The name may be a nickname after all. I have seen Rackstraw as one of the dramatis personae in a 17th-century play, but I cannot lay my hand on it, having lost the reference. In any case the name is of North-English origin.

Radbone.—Local; v. Rathbone.

Radborne, Radburn, Radbrun.—Local, (1) 'of Radbourne,' parishes in cos. Derby and Warwick; (2) 'of Redbourne,' parishes in cos. Herts and Lincoln. The modern pronunciation is Rad-, not Red-.

Radford, Radforth.—Local, 'of Radford,' 'villages and hamlets in cos. Notts, Oxford, and Warwick' (Lower). For suffix, v. Ford and Forth. Radford in co. Notts originated a surname which spread over the border into Derbyshire and thence to Cheshire and Lancashire. In fact, it is the chief parent.

Radmall, Radmell.—Local, 'of Rodmill,' co. Sussex, formerly written Radmell. 'It had owners of its own name, called de Rademylde, in the 14th century' (Lower, Patr. Brit. p. 283). But Redmall is a parish in co. Norwich; and Redmile, a parish in co. Leicester; and Rathmell, a parish in dioc. Ripon. Probably all have one and the same root origin as local names.

Radmond, Radmon; v. Redmond, of which they are variants.

Manchester, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 1, 1.

Radnall.—Local, 'of Redenhall,' a parish in dioc. Norwich. But some spot in North England of the same name may have originated the surname in that part of the country. One of my instances lies in co. Northumberland.

Radway.—Local, 'of Radway,' a parish in co. Warwick, and dioc. of Worcester. For further information, v. Rodway, the commoner modern form.

Geoffrey de Radeweie, co. Devon, Hen. III-Edw. I. K.

Thomas de Radeweie, co. Devon, ibid. London, 1.

Rae.—Nick, 'the roe,' a Scottish form. North English ra; A.S. rað; v. Ray and Roebuck.

London, 10; Philadelphia, 5.

Raeburn, Reyburn.—Local, 'of Raeburn,' a stream in the parish of Eskdalemuir, co. Dumfries.

1803. Married—Allan Raeburn and Mary Saunders: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 291.

Newcastle, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 4.

Raffe.—Bapt. 'the son of Ralph,' popularly Raff. 'Raaf, prophy name, Radulphus': Prompt. Parv. Cf. Ruff, Roof, Rofe, &c., for Rolf, from Rudolph.

Raffles.—Local, 'of Raffles,' Lower says, 'A place in the parish of Mouswald, in Dumfriesshire. That parish contains five old border fortresses; the least dilapidated is that of Raffles' (Patr. Brit. p. 283).

Crockford, 1; Liverpool, 1.

Raffman.—Occup. 'a dealer in raff' (cf. riff-raff). So far as I can find, both surname and occupation (so termed) are peculiar to co. Norfolk. The Prompt. Parv. has 'Raaf, ware.' Raff meant refuse, shearings of cloth, wool—any rubbish in fact that was saleable. In the Guild of St. George, Norwich, 1385, occurs the name of John Raffman, also Robert Smith, raffman, and John Smith, raffman (Early Eng. Text Soc., English Gilds). Nevertheless Blomefield (FF. iii. 207), enumerating the companies in the procession of Corpus Christi Day, mentions the 'grocers and raffmen,' and explains in a note, 'i.e. raffmen, those that deal in rafts or timber pieces.' I do not think this will bear investigation.

1406. Henry Ruffman, bailiff of Yarmouth: FF. xi. 324.

1506. Richard Hill, rafeman, gave a suit of vestments: ibid. iv. 249.

Ragg, Rage.—Bapt. 'the son of Ragg,' a nick. of Ragner (Reyner) or Reginhold (Reynold), both very familiar personal names in the surname period. The instances adduced are from Yorkshire, where Ragg, Rage, and Wragg (q.v.) are well-known surnames, and where Reyner (Ragner) was at the same time one of the favourite font-names. Wragg is the favourite modern Yorkshire form; cf. Wray and Ray (a).

Raggett, Ragget.—Nick. 'the ragged,' i.e. the shaggy, the rough-haired. Lower says, 'Reigate, in Surrey, locally so pronounced.' It may be so. But a familiar entry in mediaeval records is 'le Ragged,' and that seems the more natural elucidation. 'Raggyd (or torne, P.), laciniosus, laciniosus': Prompt. Parv. v. Ragman.

Ragman.—Nick. 'one who went ragged.' 'Ragmann, or he that goythe wythe jaggyd clothys, pannicus, vel pannicia': Prompt. Parv. It is, once more, interesting to notice that Prompt. Parv. was written in Norfolk, the county whence my instance comes.

Rain, Raine, Raines, Rains, Rayne, Raynes.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Reine.' Fr. Reine (Queen).

Reine Bacun, co. Camb., 1273. A. Alice Reine, co. Camb., ibid. John Reyn, co. Linc., ibid. Nicholas Reyn, co. Linc., ibid.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Rayne,' seemingly a nick. of Reynier or Reynold, common in N. England, where Reynier was extremely popular.

Rainbird, Raynbird.—Bapt. 'theson of Reynebaud.' A manifest corruption, and found in the district where Reynebaud or Reynebold was an early and familiar personal name (v. Rumball for instances). The corruption is, as usual, imitative. My instances are decisive.

'Witnesses, Roger, sub-prior, Rainbird, the sacrist, and William, the deacon,' temp. 12th cent., co. Norf.: FF. ii. 207. 1483. Thomas Reynberd, of Thetford, co. Norf.: ibid. ii. 62.

1549. Robert Raynbald, of Norwich: ibid. iv. 232 n. London, 2, 1; MDB. (Suffolk), 0, 1; Norwich, 1, 0; Ipswich, 1, 0.

Rainbow.—Bapt. 'the son of Reynebaud' (v. Rainbird). Doubtless an imitative corruption as found in co. Norfolk, the habitat of the Rainbirds. I have no doubt in my own mind as to the truth of this derivation.

1524. Stephen Rainbow, sheriff of Norwich: FF. iii. 219. London, 3; Oxford, 1; Philadelphia, 1.

Rainford, Rainforth.—Local, 'of Rainford,' a chapelry in the parish of Prescot, co. Lancaster. For suffix, v. Ford and Forth.

Rainscroft; v. Ravenscroft.

Raistrick.—Local; v. Rastrick.

Raively; v. Reveley. An American variant.

Raleigh, Rawley, Ralley.—Local, 'of Raleigh.' Some spot (I cannot find it) in co. Devon where the family were settled so long ago as six centuries. Sir Walter Raleigh's father lived at Fardel in that county, and he was born at Hayes on the coast. Rawley seems to have been the pronunciation (the present orthography), hence the point of the many epigrams on Sir Walter.

The following spellings occur in the Index to Reg. Univ. Oxf.: Raleigh, Raleighe, Rallegh, Raughley, Raughlie, Raughly, Rauleigh, Rauleigh, Raully, Rawlie, Rawleigh, Rawley, Rawleygh, Rawlei, Rawlighe, Rawlye, and Raylye.

Ramsden.—Local, 'of Ramsden,' i.e. the ram's den or dean. A.S. ram, rom + den, a dell, glen, or dingle. Some small spot, probably in the W. Rid. of Yorkshire, has given birth to a large contingent of Ramsdens resident in that county; cf. the places Ramsbotham, co. Lanc., and Ramsgill, W. Rid. Yorks; cf. also Ramsden, a parish in dioc. Randolph.—Bapt. 'the son of Randolph.' The Lond. Dir. owes many entries to this once famous name. Randle was the favourite nick. form, and for centuries held its own as a font-name in Cheshire on account of the popularity of Randle, Earl of Chester, the Crusader. On the same page of the Index to Earwaker's East Cheshire I find Rander Bowres, Randle Blackshaw, and Randle Blundeville. The directory forms are Randle, Randall, and Randell. Rand was another abbreviation, and to it we owe Rand, Rands, and Ranson. With the diminutive kin added we get Rankin, Ranken, and Ranking. Ralph was, however, the most generally favoured corruption of Randolph. Primary stages will be found below:

Robert fil. Ranulf, co. Linc., 1273. A.

Peter Randulf, co. Bedf., ibid.

Ranulph fil. Ranulph, co. Suff., ibid.

Engilard fil. Radulf, co. Salop, ibid.

Ranford; v. Rainford: a corruption. In the same way Ravensford became Rainsford and Ransford, q.v.

Liverpool, 2.

Ranger.—Occup.; v. Rainger.

Ranigar; v. Runacres.

Ranken; v. Rankin.

Rankill.—Bapt. 'the son of Ravenchil,' an old personal name, very early reduced to Rankil. I am confirmed in my view by the fact that all my instances belong to one locality.

Rauenchil, co. York: Domesday.

Ranchil, co. York: ibid.

Rankil, the Miller (Molendinarius), 1176:

ibid.

Stephen Ravenchil, Yorks, temp. 1390:

ibid. p. 47.

Stephen Ranchel, Yorks, temp. 1390: FFF. p. 106.

Thus it is clear that the Yorkshire personal name Ravenchil or Ranchil became a surname in the guise of Rankil or Rankill. I believe Ravenhill (q.v.) is the present descendant. It is incredible that the surname should have entirely died out. Query: Is Rankin (a Yorkshire surname) sometimes a corruption of Rankil?

Rankin, Ranken, Ranking.—Bapt. 'the son of Randolph,' from nick. Ran or Rand, and dim. Rand-kin or Ran-kin. The first two instances below, however, rather point to Reyner or Reynold as the parent source. Cf. Rancock.

Ransdale.—Local, 'of Ravensdale.' There is a Ravendale, a hamlet, in the parish of Muggington, co. Derby. But probably several places of this name exist. With the corrupted Ransdale, cf. Rainscroft for Ravenscroft, or Ransley for Ravensley. v. Raven.
London, 1.

Ransford.—Local, 'of Ravensford.' I do not know where the spot is. The meaning is 'the ford which belonged to Raven'; v. Raven and Ransdale, or Rawnsley.

Ransley.—Local; v. Rawnsley.

Ranson, Ransom, Ransome.—Bapt. 'the son of Randolph,' from the nick. Rand, and patr. Randson. This became Ranson, and then Ransom or Ransome; cf. Hansom for Hanson (q.v.), or Sansom for Sanson (v. Sampson), or Milson (q.v.) for Milson. The Ransons and Ransoms run side by side in cos. Norfolk and Suffolk. For further particulars, v. Rand. Mr. Lower says, 'I should judge this name was originally Ransham, though I find no place so called' (!). Mr. Ferguson finds the etymon in the O. Norse ransamr, praed-abundus, piratical. 'What curious changes,' says he, 'the whirligig of time brings round! We take our money to the descendant of the old sea-robber to take care of for us—Ransom & Co., bankers, Pall Mall. Another Ransome has turned his sword into a ploughshare, and become famed as a maker of agricultural implements at Ipswich' (!!!). All this is purely imaginary.

on our directories), and dim. Rapkin; cf. Wilkin, Jefkin, &c.

Ratcliff, Ratcliffe.—Local, 'of Radcliff,' q.v. Simply a sharpened pronunciation.

Rathbone, Rawbone, Rawbon, Rathborne, Radbone.—? Local, 'of Ruabon' (?). There seems little doubt that these surnames hail from co. Ches., also that Ruabon is the parent. The change to Rathbone is peculiar, but perhaps the place-name Ruabon has undergone a change. I furnish an instance of Rawbone from the Prestbury registers (co. Ches.) dated 1603. A Thomas Rathbone was living there in 1695. His name occurs in a document; v. East Cheshire, ii. 226. This is corroborative. I see Lower says, 'Rawbone, a corruption of Rathbone.' It may be the other way about.

Ratray.—Local, 'of Ratray,' a parish in co. Perth. Lower says, 'Derived from a barony of the same name in Perthshire. The first of the name on record is Alan de Ratheriff, who lived in the reigns of William the Lion and Alexander III. The family still reside at Craighall, in the parish of Ratray': Patr. Raven.—Bapt. 'the son of Raven.' In Domesday the name existed both in Derbyshire and Cheshire; cf. Sparrowhawk, also a personal name at the same period. In place-names like Ravenscroft, Rawnsley, &c., the probability is that the spot took its name from Raven, the proprietor, rather than from the fact that ravens abounded there.

Ravenhill.—?—Mr. Lower says, 'Local, "the hill frequented by ravens."' This is easy enough to write, and, of course, it is well-nigh impossible to contradict the statement. At the same time I cannot discover a hill so called, nor any entry with a local prefix. Yet the surname is a familiar one, there being eight in the London Dir. alone. May it not be the once great personal name of Ravenchil? 'Rauenchil, co. Yorks' (Domesday). In the same county we find later on:

Raw, Rawe.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Ralph,' from the nick. Raw, whence such surnames as Raw-son or Raw-kins, q.v. (2) Local, 'at the Row,' i. e. the row of cottages. N.E. raw, from residence therein or thereby. Probably the latter is in general the true parent, being a North-English surname.

Rawsthorne, Rawstorne, Rawstion, Rawstron, Roston, Rostherne.—Local, 'of Rostherne,' a parish and village in co. Ches. A family of Rosthernes seem early to have removed into the neighbouring county of Lancashire, and settled in the district around Bury, thence distributing themselves over the county. A representative family named Rawsthorne still holds a good position in co. Lancashire. The corrupted forms are many, the favourite being Roston. Five Rostons are still found in the Bury Directory.

Reason, Reeson, Rayson.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of —' (?). (2) Local, 'of Rasen' (?). Several instances below suggest that the suffix is not -son, but the dim. -on or -in, as in Mari-on, Rob-in, &c. Possibly it is the dim. of the once popular Rose (q.v.), of which the German dim. was Roschen, the French Rosine, and the later English Rosanne. All is conjecture, but I feel nearly positive that -son is not the terminative. The entries in the Hundred Rolls (A.) would be John fil. Ray, not John Raysun, as below. But v. Rayson, which will explain much.

Redfern, Redfearn, Redferne.—Local, 'of Redfern,' a well-known Lancashire surname. I cannot identify the spot. Probably it will be found near Rochdale. Redhead.—Nick. 'with the red head'; cf. Whitehead, Silverlock, Brownbeard, &c. It is quite possible the name is local, from some red-coloured headland of rock or soil. There are such spots so called in Forfarshire and Orkney. But one thing is certain, Yorkshire is the source of the family of Redheads that have drifted westwards into the Furness district of North Lancashire. No prefix is found, pointing distinctly to a nickname origin.

Ree.—Local, 'at the ree.' I do not know what Ree means. One of my entries refers manifestly to Rye, a town in Sussex. Lower says, 'La Rie, meaning a bank, is a very common name of localities in Normandy' (Patr. Brit. p. 298). It is not to be confounded with the Cumberland Reay, or Scotch Rae, q.v.

Remnant, Remblant.—Bapt. 'the son of Rembrandt'; cf. the name of the artist Rembrandt. This was really his baptismal name; probably he was Rembrandt Hermanszoon (Hermanson), or Rembrandt van Rhyn of Leyden. He was buried as 'Rembrant van Rign,' Oct. 8, 1669 (v. Chambers' Encyclop. viii. 180). I suspect Remnant (an imitative corruption) is an immigrant from the Low Countries. Remblant is an intermediate stage.

Rendall, Rendel, Rendell, Rendle.—Bapt. Probably mere changes rung upon Randle or Randal, the nick of Randolph (v. Randall). Perhaps, however, it would be more natural to refer them to Rennell (q.v.), a popular form of Reynold. Then the d would be merely intrusive, as is common after n; cf. Simmonds, Hammond, riband, and the vulgar gound.

1757. Married—James Rendall and Rachel Witcomb: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 68.
London, 12, 3, 8, 1.

Render, Rinder.—Occur, or official, 'the renderer,' one who paid rent, one who held by an annual payment; v. redditus (i.e. rent) capitalis, redditus mobilis, redditus servicii, redditus assisus, &c. (Introduction to Pipe Roll, p. 90). v. Rinder. This surname still exists in Yorkshire, where it is found five centuries ago.

Rennard; v. Renaud.

Rennell, Rennels.—Bapt. 'the son of Reynold,' popularly Rennel; v. Reynell and Reynold. The first instance below is very conclusive:

1766. Married—Robert Rennells and Eliz. Bond: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 188.

Later on the d is omitted.

London, 1, 1; Philadelphia, 0, 2.

Rennick; v. Renwick.

Rennison, Renison.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Reynold,' a corruption of Reynoldson. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Reyner' (v. Rayner), a corruption of Reynerson. No doubt both (1) and (2) have contributed. But as Reyner was a great Yorkshire font-name in the 13th and 14th centuries, (2) must be looked upon as the chief parent.

Renshaw.—Local, 'of Ravenshaw,' some small but, I fear, lost spot in East Cheshire. The surname has ramified very strongly. The suffix is found alike as -shall or -shaw; cf. Henshall and Henshaw, Shallcross and Shawcross, in the same district. Ravenshaw means the shaw or wood belonging to Raven, an early personal name of much popularity (v. Rawnsley and Raven, and cf. Ravenscroft, a surname found in East Cheshire also). The full form ran alongside the abbreviated for a time.

John Ravenshaw, of Walkerton, 1673: Wills at Chester (1660-80), p. 220.

The first step towards the modern form was Rainshaw (cf. Rainow, formerly Ravenowe, a township in the parish of Priestbury).

1570. Bapt.—Alice Raynshawe: Prestbury Ch. (Cheshire), p. 33.

This same Ralph was buried at Prestbury:

Thus in two entries concerning the same individual we see the last stage practically reached.

Renton.—Local, 'of Renton.' Lower says, 'Renton, a small town in Dumbartonshire.' Probably some of our English-seeming Rentons hail from this place, but evidently, from the large number, not all.

Repington, Rippington.—Local, 'of Repton,' a parish in co. Derby, 'otherwise written Repinton,' says Mr. Lower (Patr. Brit. p. 288). This is borne out by the Hundred Rolls:

Prior de Repindon, co. Derby, 1273. A.
Also cf.

Prior de Reppendon, or Reppedon, co. Derby, Hen. III—Edw. I. K.

Later on we find the d sharpened into t:

Humphrey Repington, co. Warw., 1590: ibid. p. 180.

Edward Repington, or Rippington, 1598: ibid. p. 227.

It is quite manifest that Rippington and Repington originally hail from Repton in Derbyshire.

Reskimer.—Local, 'of Reskymer.' Seemingly an old Cornish font-name. The instances are before the period when surnames were (saving in exceptional cases) turned into Christian names. Nevertheless Lower, quoting Gilbert's Hist. of Cornwall, says, 'The family (Reskymer) became extinct in the 17th century. They had resided for fourteen generations on their estate of Reskymer, in the parish of St. Mawgan, near Helston.' Doubtless therefore the name is local. The surname still exists in the form of Reskimer, as I have personally met with a gentleman of that name.

Reuter.—Occup.; v. Rutter.

Reveley, Raively.—Local, 'of Reveley,' a township in the parish of Ingram, co. Northumberland. Lower says, 'The Reveleys, who trace their pedigree to the reign of Edward II, were originally seated at the manor-house of Reveley, on the northern bank of the river Breamish, at the southeastern foot of Cheviot.' The surname is thus distinctly Northumbrian.

1801. Married.—John Gregory and Isabel Revely: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 244.

MDb. (co. Northumberland), 1, o; (North Rid. Yorks), 1, o; Philadelphia, o, 3.

Revell, Revill.—Bapt. 'the son of Revel,' a forgotten personal name. Mr. Lower says, 'Two places in Normandy bear the name of Réville, one near Bernai, the other in the arrondissement of Valognes. The surname still exists in Normandy.' The objection to this is that there is no prefix de in our instances, not even in the Testa de Neville, and it is found familiarly in different places widely scattered. The matter is practically settled by the occurrence of Revel as a personal name, without surname, in the Hundred Rolls. It is a common surname in present Yorkshire directories.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick, Rick (cf. Dick and Hick), whence the genitive Ricks, (cf. Williams for William) modified to Rix (cf. Dix for Dicks), and lastly to Rex. Nine-tenths of our Rexes must be thus derived. For instances, v. Rix and Rixon. The change from Rix to Rex is modern, and, of course, imitative of the Latin.

Rhodes, Rhoads.—(1) Local, 'of Rhodes.' Many of the Manchester Rhodes hail from Rhodes, two estates, one between Prestwich and Ringley, and the other near Middleton. Probably both local terms are equivalent to royds and imply an early ridding. (2) Local, 'at the roads,' i.e. cross-roads. Here the h is intrusive. This was a common Yorkshire entry, and explains the large number of Rhodes in the West Riding Dir. For instances, v. Roades.

Riches.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Richer' (q.v.), from the genitive Richers, imitated into Riches. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from the nick. Rich, genitive Riches, as in the case of Watts, Williams, Jones, &c. But the first derivation is the correct one in most instances. The following doubtless refer to one individual:

Henry Richers, co. Norf., 1572: FF. ii. 492.

Henry Riches, co. Norf., 1573: ibid. p. 484.

John Riches (of Walpole), co. Norf., 1707: ibid. ix. 113.

Edmund Riches, of Norwich, 1740: ibid. iv. 161.

1769. Married—Thomas Newton and Martha Riches: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 185. London, 34; MDB. (co. Norfolk), 29; Philadelphia, 1.

Richey, Richie.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard'; v. Ritchie.

Riching, Richings.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from nick. Rich, and dim. Richin; the g is intrusive, the s in Richings, patronymic.

Oxford, o, 5; Philadelphia, 1, o.

Richman, Rickman.—Bapt. 'the son of Richman' or Rickman; cf. Richard and Rickard. The local Rickmansworth in the diocese of St. Alban's is thus explained. Richman le Savener, with his daughters Alvena, Mabilia, and Matilda, sold soap to the undergraduates of Cambridge in 1273 (A. ii. 382). v. Richmond.

Rickert, Rickerts.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard'; v. Ricard and Richart.

Philadelphia, 7, 3.

Ricket, Rickets, Rickett, Ricketts.—Bapt. 'the son of Ricard,' from the nick. Rick, and dim. Rick-et. Ricketts is the genitive; cf. Williams, Jones, &c. v. Rickson.

1606. Married—John Scarbroughe and Hester Rickett: St. Mary Aldermay, p. 11.

1659. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Ralph Ricketts: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 206.

1694. Married—Samuel Ricketts and Hannah Hughes: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 48.

London, 2, 1, 4, 12; Philadelphia, 2, o, 3, 21.

Rickman.—Bapt.; v. Richman.

Rickon.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard,' from nick. Rick, dim. Rick-on; cf. the corresponding forms Dick and Dickon or Diccon (v. Dicconson, s.v. Dickens).

Thomas fil. Ricun, co. Hunts, 1273. A. London, 1; MDB. (co. Kent), 2.

Rickson.—Bapt. 'the son of Ricard,' from the nick. Rick, whence the patronymic Rick-son. The usual modern dress is Rixon, q.v.

1551. Anthony Riceson, of Bleasdale: Lanc. Wills at Richmond, i. 230.

1791. Married—Francis Rickson and Eliz. Wood: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 54.

Boston (U.S.), 3.

Riddell, Riddall, Riddel, Riddal, Riddle, Ridel.—(1) Local, 'of Riddell,' in the parish of Lilliesleaf, co. Roxburgh. A clan name of great antiquity. (2) Local; v. Reddall (1).

1761. Married—William Riddel and Mary Simpson: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 106.

Ridding.—Local; a variant of Reading, q.v.

Crockford, 3.

Riddington.—Local, 'of Wrightington,' a township in the parish of Eccleston, co. Lancaster. Wrightington first became Rightington, then Riddington; cf. Riddington.

Mary Wrightington, of Wrightington, 1580: Wills at Chester, i. 219.

1713. Bapt.—John, s. John and Eliza Rightington: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 73.

1716. — Eliz., d. John and Eliz. Wrightington: ibid. p. 93.

In the next generation we find the following:

1736. Bapt.—Mary, d. John and Mary Ridington: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 229.
1738. Bapt.—Eliz., d. John and Mary Rightington: ibid. p. 241.

Thus Riddington is conclusively proved to be a corruption of Wrightington.

Roadhouse.—Local; v. Royd-house.

Roadnight, Redknight, Rod-night.—Offic. 'the road-knight,' a riding servitor or attendant on horseback. In feudal times rod-knights were 'certain servitors who held their lands by serving their lords on horseback' (Lower, Patr. Brit.), 'Rodknights'; Spelman's Gloss. The name still exists, though not in Lond. Dir. I met the name in my own parish (Oct. 1885) at Conishead Priory Hydropathic Establishment among the list of visitors.

Roafe.—Bapt. 'the son of Ralph'; v. Rolf.

London, 1.

Roan.—(1) Local, 'of Rouen,' the capital of Normandy; a mediaeval spelling. An old poet, speaking of Richard I, says:

'Thy bowels only Carceol keeps;
Thy corse Font Everard;
But Roan hath keeping of thy heart,
O puissant Richard.'

(v. Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 290.)

(2) Local, 'at the rowan,' from residence beside a rowan-tree; cf. Roantree for Rowantree (v. Rowntree). So also we have Crabb and Crabtree, Plumb and Plumtree. Of (1) and (2) the second is probably the true derivation in most cases.

1774. Married—John Keats and Eleanor Roan: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 246.
London, 6, 0; Philadelphia, 7, 3.

Roanson.—Bapt. 'the son of Rowland,' an abbreviation of Rowlandson; v. Rownson and Ronson.

Roantree.—Local; v. Rowntree, a manifest variant.

Rob, Robb.—Bapt. 'the son of Robert,' from the nick. Rob. The favourite nicks. were Hob and Dob. The patronymics of the three are Robson, Hobson, and Dobson.

Robin, Robins, Robbins, Robinson.—Bapt. 'the son of Robert,' from nick. Rob. and dim. Rob-in; cf. Col-in from Nicholas. The number of entries in the London Directory is sufficient proof of the early popularity of Robin. Birds, flowers, and weeds soon took possession of the name, the ruddock giving way to robin-redbreast so completely as to cause the earlier name to be forgotten.

Rochford, Rochfort.—Local, 'of Rochford.' Lower says, 'The Irish family settled in that country at, or soon after, the Anglo-Norman invasion. Their name was Latinized "de Rupe Forti," of the strong rock, which is doubtless its true meaning'; Patr. Brit. p. 292. This is not satisfactory. The name has sprung from two towns in England, Rochford in co. Essex, and Rochford in co. Hereford. The meaning is the ford on the river Roche, so far as the Essex town is concerned, the Latinization being a mere play on the name.

not lit, so was evidently soon dropped. But it proves the popularity of the font-name.

Roger, Rogers, Rogerson, Rodger, Rodgers.—Bapt. 'the son of Roger.' In Domesday Rogerus, co. Norf. Exceedingly common in the 13th century all over the country, giving us the nicks.
Hodge and Dodge, and through them Hodgson, Hodgkins, Hodgkinson, &c., q.v. Rogervied with Robert, John, and William for popularity for several centuries.
In France, too, the name was a favourite, the French proverb for 'There's a good time coming'
being 'Roger Bon Temps.'
Hodge is now an English synonym for a peasant or agricultural labourer. Once a knightly name, Roger has fallen from his high estate, and is, as Joan, ever among the poor. Early registers teem with the name. I furnish one or two instances for form's sake :

Rokster.—Occup. 'the rokster',
a woman who worked the distaff.
The terminative is the feminine -ster, as in spinster, a synonymous term.

'Sir, for Jack nor for Gille
Wille I turne my face,
Tille I have on this hille
Spun a space upon my rok.'

Rolf, Rolfe, Rolfes, Rolph.

—Bapt. 'the son of Rudolph,' from the nick. Rolf or Rolph. As Ralph represented Randolph, so
Rolph or Rolf stood for Rudolph.
Lower says it is the same as Ralph, and adds, 'The great landowner Goisfrid de Bec, son of Rollo, and grandson of Crispinus, baron of Bec, is styled in Domesday "filius Rolf"': Patr. Brit. p. 292.

Roll, Rolls, Rolles, Rowles.

—Bapt. 'the son of Ralph,' i. e.
Randolph or Radulph, from the Norman-Fr. Raoul, the dim. of which was Raoul-in, whence our Rawlins and Rawlinsons, also in some cases our Rollins and Rollinsons; v. Rawlin.

Rollin, Rollins, Rollings,

Rollinson, Rolling.—Bapt. 'the son of Ralph,' from the dim. Raw-lin or Rowlin, of which Rollin was a popular variant (v. Rawlin).
The g in Rolling and Rollings is an excrescence, as in Rawling or Rawlings.

Rollinson.—Bapt. 'the son of Rowland.' Many of the North-

English Rollinsons are thus descended. (For origin of the South-English Rollinsons, v. preceding article.) In the Furness district of North Lancashire many changes have been rung on Rowlandson, the following being the chief, viz.
Rollandson and Rollingson. Such entries as the following were common :

William Rollandson, of Cartmell, 1596 :
Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 237.

John Rollingson, of Cartmell, 1596 :

Rolph; v. Rolf.

Rolt.—Bapt. 'the son of Roald.' A common personal name in the 13th and 14th centuries. As to the truth of this derivation there cannot be the shadow of a doubt. Roald, which owing to its popularity was bound to leave descendants, was gradually sharpened into Roalt, and then became Rolt.

Romilly.—Local, 'of Romilly'; probably Romilly, a town in Savoy, near Geneva (Lower). The present Romillys are descendants of a French Protestant who settled in England at the beginning of the last century (v. Memoirs of Sir Samuel Romilly, i. 2). Romeley existed six hundred years ago, but is evidently of English origin. It either died out or became incorporated with Romeny, now Romney and Rumney.

Rosamund; v. Roseaman.

Roscoe, Roscow.—Local (?). Mr. Lower says, 'Possibly a corruption of Roscrowe. It is certainly a Cornish name' (Patr. Brit. p. 293). 'I take leave to doubt this statement. I feel sure it is a Lancashire local surname, although I cannot find the spot.

Roskilly, Roskelly.—Local, 'of Roskilly,' an estate in St. Keverne, co. Cornwall, anciently the residence of the family (v. Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 294).

London, 3, 0; Cornwall Court Dir., 1, 0; Boston (U.S.), 0, 1.

Roskruge, Rosekroge.—Local, 'of Roscruge,' an estate in the parish of St. Anthony, co. Cornwall. It gave 'name and original,' says Hals, 'to a family of gentlemen now or lately in possession thereof' (Lower, quoting Gilbert's Cornwall).

Cornwall Court Dir., 1, 1.

Rosling, Rusling.—Bapt. 'the son of Rocelin.' This was at an early period popular in co. Lincoln as a personal name. As a result it is to that county we now look for representatives of the surname. Lower says, 'Rosling; a corruption of Roslyn, a village in co. Edinburgh.' He does not furnish a title of evidence. The final g is, of course, an excrescence, as in Jennings.

Rosoman; v. Roseaman.

Rossall, Rossell.—(1) Local, 'of Rossall,' near Fleetwood, co. Lanc. It was formerly a grange belonging to the abbey of Deulacres, co. Stafford. In Domesday it is styled Rushale. The following dwelt close by Rossall:

Margrett Rossall, of Bispham, widow, 1578: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 237.

John Rossall, of Warbrecke, yeoman, 1618: ibid.

Thomas Rossall, of Norbrecke, 1667: ibid.

Rosser.—Bapt. 'the son of Rosser' (Welsh), whence Prosser (=ap-Rosser), q.v. Mr. Lower says, 'A dweller upon a heath, or upon a promontory.' This is quite untenable. He connects it with the Scottish Ross. It is a purely Welsh surname.

Rossiter. — (1) Local, 'of Wroxeter,' a parish in co. Salop. So says Mr. Lower, and I see no reason to doubt the statement (v. Patr. Brit. p. 294). (2) Local, 'of Rochester.' This derivation is probably in most cases the correct one. From Roucester to Rossiter would be an inevitable step.

Rosthern, Roston, Rostron.—Local; v. Rawsthorne.

Roswell, Rosewell. — ? Local, 'de Rosseville' (?). Mr. Lower writes, 'Said to be a corruption of the French Rosseville. It is therefore local, but I know not the place. Kent, in his Grammar of Heraldry, speaks of the Rev. S. Rosewell, of London, M.A., as descended from the Rosewells of Somersetshire, Wiltshire, and Devon, who came in with the Conqueror': Patr. Brit. p. 295. I do not think there is any ground for this. I believe the West-country Rosewells, Ruswells, Rowsells, and Rousells are all mere variants of Russell (v. Rowsell). I cannot find any early Rossewells in English registers.

Routeledge, Rookledge,

Ruckledge.—Local, 'of Routeledge.' I cannot find the spot. It has representatives in every part of the world. It is a great Border name, and whether it be Scotch or English, it must live for ever. The suffix -ledge is -lake; v. Depledge. For other variants, v. Rutledge.

Rowand; v. Round.

Rowbotham, Rowbottom, Robotham, Robottom.—Local, 'at the roe-bottom,' from residence in the depressed ground frequented by the deer. I cannot find the spot, but the name sprung up in the same district as Shufflebotham, Winterbottom, and Ramsbotham (q.v.), somewhere in the south-east corner of Lancashire. The surname is strongly represented across the Atlantic.

1546. Married—Robert Rowe and Dorythye Robotom: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 5.

Roycraft, -croft; v. Rycroft.

Royd, Royds.—Local, 'at the rode' (so always spelt in early records), an old term implying a riding, or clearing. Compounded with the Christian name of the proprietor or settler we get Murgatroyd (Margret = Margaret) or Ormerod (Orme). Whitaker, in his Hist. and Ant. of Craven, has such spots as Tomrode and Wilmotrode (Wilmot = William): p. 199. Sometimes 'royd' is compounded with the names of the hills cleared, as in Holroyd or Acroyd; sometimes with the profession of the resident, as Monkroyd or Smithroyd (Whitaker, p. 199); sometimes with a word descriptive of the locality, as in Huntroyd. The glossary to Hulton's Coucher Book of Whalley Abbey says: 'Roda, an assart or clearing. Rode land is used in this sense in modern German, in which the verb roden means to clear. The combination of the syllable rod, rode, or royd with some other term, or with the name of an original settler, has, no doubt, given to particular localities such designations as Huntroyd, Ormerod, &c.' See Notes and Queries, 1st Ser., vol. v. p. 571, for further authorities. Dr. Whitaker styles it 'a participial substantive of the provisional verb rid, to clear or grub up': see Hist. Whalley, 3rd edit., p. 364. v. Roades for further instances.

Rudge.—(1) Local, 'of Rudge,' a township in the parish of Pattingham, co. Salop. (2) Local, 'at the ridge'; v. Rugg and Ridge. (3) Nick. 'le rouge.' Fr. rouge, red; taken from the ruddy complexion; cf. Rufus and Russell. I have no evidence for (1), and therefore must suppose (2) and (3) to be the true parents.

Rudkin, Rudkins.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Rudolph' (?), dim. Rudkin; cf. Watkin, Wilkin, &c. As Rudolph, saving in the form of Rolf, was not common in England, it is probable Rudkin and Rudkins are of Dutch extraction and modern immigration. I find no early instances. (2) Nick. 'the Rutterkin,' Since writing the above it has occurred to me that this is but the Dutch Rutterkin (v. Rutter). It would naturally be found on the East coast.

London, 6, 1; MDB. (co. Lincoln), 2, 0.

Rudman, Ruddiman.—? Nick. 'the roodman,' i.e. the man who lived by the rood or cross; v. Rudd. An exactly analogous case is that of Cross and Crossman. The i in Ruddiman is euphonic; cf. Ottaway and Greenaway for Ottway and Greenway. Perhaps both Rudman and Ruddiman represent the German Rudmann. I have no proof of the derivation I have given above.

1682. Bapt.—Ann, d. Christopher Rudman: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 207.

Ruff.—Bapt. 'the son of Rudolph,' through the popular form Rolf, whence such variants as Rofe, Roff, Roof, and Ruff; cf. Raffe for Ralph, from Randolph. The following entries will be sufficient to show that Roff and Ruff are the same:

1666. Bapt.—Susan, d. John and Eliz. Roffe: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 366.
1697.—William, s. John and Eliz. Ruffe: ibid. p. 372.
1698.—Sarah, d. John and Eliz. Roffe: ibid. p. 377.

Rugg.—Local, 'at the rigg,' from residence on the rigg or rugg of the hill (v. Ridge). That Rugg is a variant of Rigg is certain. The surname Ridgway (i.e. the way over the ridge) is occasionally found as Ridgway. In the Index to Reg. Univ. Oxf. it is spelt Ridgeway, Rydgewaye, and Rudge-waye.

John Rigge, or Ryge, or Rugge, 1506: Reg. Univ. Oxf. i. 45.
1700. Bapt.—William, s. William Rugg: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 390.
London, 5; Boston (U.S.), 11.

Rumball, Rumble, Rumbles, Rumbol, Rumbold, Rumboll.—Bapt. 'the son of Reinbold' (Yonge, ii. 378); v. Rimbault. In Domesday there are recorded Reinbald, co. Worc., and Reinbold, co. Soms. Lower adds Rumbaldus. Cf. the local Rumboldswyke, a parish in dioc. Chichester. The surname has run riot in corrupted forms. The following is a curious proof of this statement:—

'After the Dissolution, King Henry VIII, in the year 1545, granted the impropriate rectory (of Keteringham, co. Norf.) to Robert Rumbold, alias Reynbald, and his heirs, to be held in capite by knight's service; and in 1558, Anne wife of Benjamin Reynbald...had livery of it': FF. v. 90.

To this day Rumball is a popular surname in cos. Norfolk and Suffolk. For a curious imitative corruption, v. Rainbird.

Rumbelow.—Nick. 'Rumbelow,' a sobriquet for a sailor. Rumbelow was the sailor's 'Haeveho' of later days, and the burden of all early sea-songs. In 'The Squire of Low Degree' it is said—

'Your mariners shall syng arow,
Heyhow, and rumbylow.'

Halliwell says, 'The burden of the Cornwall furry-day song is, "With halantow rumbelow." As seen below, Rumbelow is found as a Cornish surname. 'Well, old Rumbelow, how are you?' would be the kind of way in which the sobriquet arose. The Constable of Nottingham Castle in 1369 was one Stephen Rumbilowe (v. my English Surnames, 2nd edit. p. 512).

Rumble(s), Rumbol(l), Rumbold; v. Rumball.

Rumfitt, Rumford.—Local, 'of Romford,' a parish in co. Essex. The corruption is a natural one; cf. Brumfitt for Broomfield.

1796. Married—John Johnson and Mary Rumford: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 114. London, 2, 2; York, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 7.

Rumley; v. Rumney.

Rummans, Rummens, Rumens, Rummons, Romans.—? Bapt. 'the son of Rumin' (?). Lower, quoting Ferguson, says, 'Rumun, an Old Norse personal name.' This view seems confirmed by the fact that it is found early on the East coast.

John Rumin, co. Linc., 1273. A.

But v. Romaine, of which it may be but a vulgar corruption. Romans is found in the London Dir. side by side with Romaine. Rummen in the first of the following instances seems to be a corrupted form of Romaine:

1767. Married—William Rummen and Mary Hine: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 168.

1774. — John Rummens and Ann Faulkner: ibid. p. 247.

1802. — John Rumens and Marg. Catley: ibid. ii. 282.

Rumminger.—Occup. 'the rummager,' a sailor who stowed away luggage in the hold of vessels. 'The master must provide a perfect mariner called a romager, to rounge and bestow all merchandize in such place as is conuenient' (Hackluyt's Voyages, iii. 862); v. rummage in Skeat's Dict.

'Robert Rommongoure, alias Robert Copehed de Branketre, Rommongoure, alias Robert Copehed de Nestede, Rommongoure': Pardons Rolls, 5-21 Ric. II, Anno 8, 1384-5.

Rumney, Romney, Rumley.—(1) Local, 'of Romney,' two parishes in co. Kent. (2) Local, 'of Romilly' (q.v.), by change of l to n (cf. baluster and banister). There can be no doubt that nearly all our Romneys, Rumneys, and Rumleys are so derived. Rumney, a parish in co. Monmouth, does not seem to have given birth to any surname.

Rump.—Bapt. 'the son of Rumpe,' probably a nick of Humphrey, the initials R and H being interchangeable in the nicks of personal names; cf. Hodge for Roger, Hick for Richard, or Hob for Robert. The surname still lives in the counties where it is found six centuries ago.

Geoffrey fil. Rumphar', co. York, 1273. A.

The above looks like Humphrey in full with R for H.

Casse Rumpe, co. Cumb., 1273. A.
Robert Rumpe, of Cawston, co. Norf., 1521: FF. vi. 266.

Although this derivation is satisfactory to a certain degree, it must not be forgotten that there is a well-known German surname Rumpp. The two may have a common parent. Should that be the case, the above solution would have to be given up.

Norwich, 5; MDB. (co. Norfolk), 5.

Rumsey.—Local, 'of Romsey,' a parish in co. Hants, near Southampton; cf. Rumney for Romney.

Runacres, Ranacre, Ranigar.—Local, 'of Ranacre.' I cannot find this Lancashire spot, but it is the parent of these three surnames; cf. Greenacre or Greenacres, Whittaker, &c. The suffix is -acre, a field. At first the place would be styled Ravenacre, i.e. the field of Raven, the first proprietor; v. Raven, Rawnsley, Ransford, &c.

1592. Thomas Ranicars, of Prescot: Wills at Chester, i. 158.

1623. George Ranicar, of Fittington: ibid. ii. 180.

Cf. Whitehorse, Roebuck, &c.

Rupell.—Local, 'at the rupel,' or coppice, from residence thereby. 'Ripple, a small coppice, co. Hereford' (Halliwell).

Philip atte Ruple, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 135.

Ruse; v. Rous.

Rush.—Nick.; v. Rous. There can be little doubt that Rush is a variant of Russ, as that is unquestionably of Rous. In the Index to Reg. Univ. Oxf., Rush and Russe are placed under one heading.

1554. Anthony Rushe, B.A.: Reg. Univ. Oxf. i. 224.

Rusher.—Occup. 'the rusher,' a thatcher, or perhaps a candle-wick maker.

Johannes Ryscher, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 125.
London, 1; Oxford, 1.

Rushford, Rushforth.—Local, 'of Rushford.' There is a parish so called in co. Norfolk, but I do not find the surname in the vicinity. Various fords where rushes grew may have contributed to our directories.

London, 0, 2; Oxford, 0, 1.

Rushmere, Rushmer, Rushmore.—Local, 'of Rushmere,' two parishes in co. Suffolk.

William de Rusmara, co. Linc., Hen. III—Edw. I. K.

Rusling; v. Rosling.

Russ; v. Rous and Russell.

1634. Buried—William Russe: St. Mary Aldermay, p. 168.
London, 7.

Russell, Russel, Rowsell, Rousell.—Nick. 'Russell,' the dim. of Rous, a sobriquet for one with hair or complexion of a reddish-brown. Just as O.F. brun, brown, took two dims. burneit and burnell, so rous, reddish brown, took two dims. russet and russell. From nicknames these became hereditary surnames, and are all in existence to-day except Russet. The fox from his colour was called Russell.

'Dan Burnel the asse.'

Chaucer, C. T. 15319.

'Dan Russel the fox.'

London, 154, 1, 10, 0; MDB. (co. Somerset), 13, 0, 11, 3.

Rust.—? Bapt. 'the son of Rust' (!). Probably a Scandinavian personal name. It still flourishes in co. Norfolk, where it is found in the 13th century.

Robert Rust, co. Hunts, 1273. A. Thomas Rust, co. Camb., ibid.
Peter Rust, co. Norf., ibid.
1492. Thomas Rust, rector of Congham, co. Norf.: FF. viii. 389.
1610. Nicholas Ruste, rector of Bixley, co. Norf.: ibid. v. 450.
1712. Married—Thomas Levett and Ann Rust: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 56. London, 11; Norwich, 3; Philadelphia, 11.

Ruston.—Local, 'of Ruston,' two parishes in co. Norf.

Walter de Ruston, co. Camb., 1273. A. John de Rustone, co. Camb., ibid.

The surname passed early into the county of Cambridge and is still found there.

1666-7. Robert King and Anne Ruston: Marriage Lic. (Westminster), p. 43.
1751. Married—Benjamin Ruston and Dorothy Beech: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 45. London, 5; Chatteris (co. Camb.), 6; Boston (U.S.), 4.

Rutland.—Local, 'of Rutland'; cf. Darbyshire, Cornish, Cumberland, &c.

Richard de Roteland, co. Oxf., 1273. A. 1584. William Rutland, co. Surrey: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 137. 1728. Married—Barnes Rutland and Eliz. Norman: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 5. London, 9; Philadelphia, 2.

Rutledge, Ruttledge, Ruttledge.—Local; v. Routledge; manifest variants.

1637. Bapt.—George, s. George Rutledge: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 137. 1766. Married—John Burton and Mary Rutledge: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 155. 1788.—John Rutledge and Ann Richards: ibid. ii. 12. London, 0, 1, 0; Liverpool, 0, 0, 1; MDB. (East Rid. Yorks), 1, 0, 0.

Rutter, Ritter, Reuter.—Occup. German ritter, a rider, i.e. a trooper; 'rutter', a rider, a trooper, from the German? (Halliwell); a name given to mercenary soldiers engaged from Brabant, &c. (v. my English Surnames, 3rd edit., p. 201). An old song begins:

'Rutterkyn is come into owre towne
In a cloke withoute cote or gowne,
Save a ragged hood to kover his crowne
Like a rutter hoyda.'

London, 1, 0, 0, 1; West Rid. Court Dir. (Rycroft), 7; MDB. (Cheshire), 2, 3, 0, 0; Manchester, 2, 1, 2, 0.

Ryder.—Occup.; v. Rider.

Ryding; v. Riding.

Rydon.—Local, 'of Rydon.'

Alan de Rydon, co. Norf., 1273. A. Thomas de Ridone, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III.: Kirby's Quest, p. 187. London, 3.

Rye.—Local, (1) 'of Rye,' a town in co. Sussex; (2) 'de la Rie.' Mr. Lower says, 'la Rie,' meaning a bank, is a very common name of localities in Normandy. There can be little doubt that this is one, if not the chief, parent of the surname.

Rygate.—Local, 'of Reigate,' a town in co. Surrey.

John de Reygate, London, 1273. A.
Stephen de Reygate, co. Wilts, ibid.
London, 1.

Rylands, Roylance, Rylance, Rawlence, Ryland.—Local, 'of the Rylands.' There are two places that have originated surnames bearing this title. Mr. J. Paul Rylands, F.S.A., says the name 'Rylands' is derived from the Anglo-Saxon rye or rhee, a water-course or stream, and lands, the lands adjoining or above the stream.' (1) Rylands, a spot situated in the township of Westhoughton, and parish of Deane, co. Lanc.

Robert del Ryulondes, of West Halgh-ton, 1 Edw. III.: 'The Rylands of the Rylands, within Westhoughton, co. Lancaster,' by J. Paul Rylands, F.S.A.

Thomas de Ryulonds, of Wilmslow, c. 1300: ibid. p. 138.

Roylance, although it has a chivalrous aspect, is purely imitative. If any doubt rested on this, it would be dispelled by the following entry concerning a farmer who was twice sued for tithe by his vicar:

Thomas Rylands, or Thomas Rylance, Warmincham, co. Chester, 1686: Exchequer Depositions, pp. 148-9, L. and C. R. S. vol. xi.

From Rylance to Roylance was as easy as it was an inevitable change. With Rylance cf. Sandilance for Sandilands.

London, 2, 1, 0, 1, 0; Manchester, 4, 4, 0, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 1, 0, 0, 3.

Ryle, Royle.—Local, 'of Ryle,' in the manor of Etchells, in the parish of Northenden, co. Ches.

'Sir Nicholas de Eton . . . concedes to Sir William de Baggyleghe, knt. . . one hamlet . . . in the vill of Echeles, which is called Ruyhal . . . which Richard de Ruyhal held . . . &c.' 1318: East Ches. i. 327.

Most of the Cheshire and Lancashire Royles and Ryles are sprung from this spot, including the late Bishop of Liverpool. In the form of Royle the surname has ramified very strongly.

1574. Married—Edward Royle and Eliz. Booth: Reg. Prestbury, co. Ches., p. 45.

1716. Married—Robert Saxby and Lydia Sabb, of Maidstone: St. Mary Aldermay, p. 43.

Mr. Lower says this surname is still existing. I have not come across it in modern directories.

Sabben, Saben; v. Sabin.

Sabey, Saby.—Bapt. 'the son of Sabine,' popularly Sabey. Sabine was a favourite font-name in the surname period; v. Sabbe and Sabin.

1641. Bapt.—James, sonne of William Saby, blacksmith: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 89.

1655. Buried—Maudlin, wife of William Sabie, blacksmith: ibid. p. 208.

London, 5, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 1.

Sabin, Sabine, Sabins, Sabben, Saben.—Bapt. 'the son of Sabine.' St. Sabina was martyred in Hadrian's persecution. The name was in much favour for a time in England. In one of the Coventry Mysteries occurs:

'Bontyng the Brewster, and Sybly Slynge,
Megge Mery-wedyr, and Sabyng Sprynge.'

Also there was St. Sabinus, the martyr bishop of Assisium.

Sacheverell.—? Local. I cannot suggest any derivation of this surname. 'Sacheverel, the iron door, or blower to the mouth of a stove' (Halliwell). This great name is represented, so far as I can see, in the 19th century by only one person, viz.: William Henry Sacheverell, clogger, Oldfield Road, Salford, Lancs.

man, Saloman, Salomans.— Bapt. 'the son of Solomon,' found variously as Saloman, Salaman, and Saleman; v. Salman and Sloman.

Salomon Judaens. C.
Salomon fil. Ivo. C.

The three following entries relate to the same individual:

Sale, Sales.—Local, 'of the sale,' i.e. the hall; cf. Fr. salle-àmanger, a dining-hall. Halliwell quotes:

'Sone thay sembled in sale
Bathe Kynges and Cardenale.'

Instances of the surname are found in every important 13th century roll.

Salas; v. Sayles.

Salisbury, Salisberry.—(1)
Local, 'of Salisbury,' a city in co.
Wilts.

Robert de Salisbyr, co. Wilts, 1273. A.
1547. Married.—Henry Salysberye and Jone Mathewe: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 5.

(2) Local, 'of Salesbury.' The Lancashire Salesburys hail from Salesbury, a village-parish between Blackburn and Ribchester. The corruption is a very slight one, and simply imitative of the name of the southern cathedral city.

London, 3; MDB. (co. Cumb.), 16; Boston (U.S.), 4.

Salman, Salmon, Salmond.—Bapt. 'the son of Solomon,' popularly in M.E. Salamon, and with excrement d Salamond (cf. Simmonds and Hammond for Simmons and Hamon). These forms represent families of English descent, Solomon representing modern Jewish immigrations. Of course the London Directory has several Salamons, undoubtedly Jewish, but, speaking generally, our Salomans, Salamans, Salemans, Salmons, Salmans, Salmonds, Sammons, and Sammonds, are of English extraction, just as much as our Davies and Davidsons are (excepting when these are Welsh or Scottish).

Salsbery, Salsbury, Salsbury.—Local; v. Salisbury.

1601. John Salsbury, or Salisbury, co. Devon: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 247.
—Bapt.—Marie, d. John Salsburie: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 39.

The following is a still briefer form:

1670. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Robert Salsbee: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 244.
1630. Married—Edward Lloyde and Ursley Salsberye: St. Mary Aldermar, p. 17.

London, 0, 4, 0; Philadelphia, 1, 2, 0; New York, 0, 1, 1.

Salt.—Local, 'of Salt,' a township in the parish of St. Mary and St. Chad, four miles from Stafford. This is the parent of all the Salts. It is a very familiar surname in the county of Stafford.

'In the reign of Hen. III, Ivo de Saut held one Knight's fee in Saut of the Barony of Stafford': Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 302.

Thomas de Wollay, salter, 1379: ibid. p. 92.

(2) Occup. 'the sautreur,' a player on the psaltery, or 'gay sawtrye,' as Chaucer styles it. A stringed instrument of the harp class.

William le Sautreur. X.
Janetto la Sautreur, minstrel of Queen Isabelle, Close Roll, 2 Edw. III.

This would easily get corrupted to Salter, as the form psalterie was in use in the 12th century.

1597. Married—William Prior and Margaret Salter: St. Mary Aldermar, p. 9.
1618. Edmund Rolfe and Dorothy Salter: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 65.

Salters.—Local, 'of the salt-house,' a manifest corruption; v. instances in Salthouse.

Philadelphia, 2.

Salthouse, Southouse.—Local, 'of the salt-house,' the place where salt was made from sea-water by evaporation. M.E. salt, Dutch zout. v. Southouse. In the first instance below I suspect the occupation of souter (shoemaker) is accidental. But, if not, Southouse in London Directories is an abbreviation of Souter-house, the shoemaker's house. I had a Soutergate in my late parish (Ulverston), i.e. the shoemaker's road. But this abbreviation would scarcely occur in a formal record in 1379. It is far more natural to make Southouse, the surname, a variant of Salt-house. Two small places, a Salt-house in Lytham, and a Salthouse in Furness, where salt was obtained from sea-water, have originated two families of Salthouse in North Lancashire.

Simon del Southouse, souter, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 254.

Saltonstall.—Local, 'of Saltonstall,' I cannot find the spot. But it must probably be looked for in co. Essex and neighbourhood. The name of the daughter of Sir Peter Saltonstall is thus entered:

1642. Edward Chester and Anne Salt-hington (co. Herts): Marriage Lic.
(London), ii. 265.

1610. Richard Saltonstall, co. Essex :

Samms, Sams.—Bapt. 'the son of Sampson,' from nick. Sam or Samp, genitive Sams (cf. William and Williams). This name was so popular, and Samuel so rare, that we must needs give it the preference ; v. Sampson.

Sampson, Samson, Sanson,
Sansome, Sanson, Sansum.—
Bapt. 'the son of Samson.' O.E.

Sampson ; O.F. Sanson. With the forms Sanson, &c., cf. Ran- sone for Ranson, or the dictionary word random for randon. It has been stated that Sanson stands for some local St. Anselm (cf. Semple for St. Paul, Sampier for St. Pierre).

This is without foundation. As a personal name Samson was in very early use. Mr. Freeman has three instances in Index to vol. iv (Hist.

Norm. Conquest). One was Bishop of Worcester ; a second, chaplain to William I ; a third, messenger to Matilda. The following entries concern one individual :

Sampson Foliot, Hen. III—Edw. I. K.
p. 104.

Sanson Foliot, ibid. p. 105.
Saunsum Foliot, ibid. p. 106.

Sansum le Rus, co. Camb., 1273. A.
Samson de Bateford, co. Bedf., ibid.
Samson de Boxe, co. Wilts, ibid.

'Item, the vi. day of Aprylle, my mastyr made a couvenaunt wyth Saunsum, the tylere, that he schalle perget,' &c. : Ac- counts of Sir John Howard (A.D. 1467), p. 395 ; v. Prompt. Parv. p. 383, ed. Way.

A well-known monastery near Rouen was built by the Archbishop of Dol, known as St. Sansone or St. Sampson. The personal name lingered long in Cornwall, where so many pre-Reformation favourites died hard.

1559. Married—John Sampson and Eliz. Clarke, widow : St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 7.

1582. Bapt.—Warne, son of Sampson
Morcombe : Reg. St. Columb Major,
Cornwall, p. 11.

1736. Married—Abraham Sampson and Ann Lawton : St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 16.

1756. —Thomas Younger and Ann
Sanson : ibid. i. 67.

1769. —John Sanson and Eliz. Bell-ton : ibid. i. 183.

1777. —Moses Samson and Mary Best :

Sams ; v. Samms.

Samuel, Samuels, Samuelson.—Bapt. 'the son of Samuel.'
Not always Jewish. There are many Samuels of English descent ;
v. Samwell.

Sanborn.—Local, a corruption of Sambourne, q.v.; cf. Sandbrook for Sambrook.

1799. Married—John Crick and Rebecca Sanburn: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 197. Philadelphia, 4.

Sancton.—Local, 'of Sancton,' a parish in E. Rid. Yorks.

John de Sancton, co. Linc., 1273. A. MDB. (co. Cumb.), 2.

Sanctuary.—Local, 'at the sanctuary,' from residence beside a shrine. 'Several monasteries had an ambit or surrounding space, where criminals might take refuge from immediate or impending danger, as the Sanctuary at Westminster. A person resident in a place so privileged, though no criminal, would readily acquire the name of Thomas or John at the Sanctuary' (Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 302). For a parallel instance, v. Galilee. Although I have no references at hand, there can be no doubt about this derivation.

MDB. (co. Dorset), 2; Crockford (1891), 1.

Sanday, Sandy.—Local, 'of Sandy,' a parish in co. Bedford.

Nicholas de Sandye, co. Hunts, 1273. A. London, 0, 2; Oxford, 1, 0; New York, 2, 2.

Sandbach, Sanbach.—Local, 'of Sandbach,' a market-town and parish in co. Ches.

London, 6, 0; New York, 0, 1.

Sandeman, Sanderman.—Occur, 'the servant of Sandy' or Saunder, i.e. Alexander; cf. Addyman, Matthewman, Jackman, Ladyman, Vickerman, &c. One of a large class. Robert Sandeman, the founder of the sect styled Sandemanians, was a native of Perth. The first five of my instances occur together, settling the origin beyond dispute:

Alexander de Rokeby, marchant des bestes, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 22.

Sansom, Sanson, Sansum.—
Bapt.; v. Sampson.

Santer.—Nick, 'sans-terre,' i.e. Lackland. The instance below seems very conclusive. One is almost in danger of suggesting the old origin of the verb to saunter (v. saunter, Skeat). The same individual is thus referred to:

John Sansterre, co. Linc., 1273. A.

John Sanzterre, co. Linc., ibid.

Santony.—Local, 'of St. Antony,' some chapelry in Normandy, no doubt; cf. Sinclair, Simbarb, St. John, &c.

Dominus St. Antonis, co. Suff., 1273. A.

1782. Married—Robert Stacey and Mary Santany: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 329. New York, 1.

Sanxter.—A variant of Sanger; v. Sanger.

Sare.—Bapt. 'the son of Sayer' (q.v.). The intermediate form was Saer, then Sare. This is one more of the endless descendants of Sagar (q.v.). The truth of this derivation is absolutely certain.

Sarl, Sarle, Sarll.—Bapt. 'the son of Sarle,' i.e. Serle, q.v. It is interesting to note that the form Sarl, found as a personal name in co. Cambridge in 1273, still flourishes there as a surname.

Sarle Tinctor, co. Hunts, 1273. A.

Matilda Sarle, co. Camb., ibid.

Sometimes Sarl is registered as Sarel (cf. Serrell for Serle).

Sarvent, Sarvant.—Occup. 'the servant'; v. Servant; cf. Perkin and Parkin, Clerk and Clark, person and parson.

London, 1, 0; New York, 0, 1.

Sass, Sasse.—Local, 'at the sasse,' 'Sasse, a lock in a river' (Halliwell).

'Sasse, from sass (Belgie), a sluice or lock, especially in a river that is cut with floodgates, to shut up or let out water for the better passage of boats and barges, as in Misterton Sasse' (The Isle of Axholme, its place-names and river-names, John K. Johnstone, p. 59).

Satchell.—? Bapt. 'the son of Sachel.' Lower says: 'Satchell, a small sack or bag. Probably an ancient trader's sign' (Patr. Brit. p. 303). This is very unlikely. Probably one of the many personal names ending in -el.

Thomas Sachel, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 190.

1715. Bapt.—Fritty William, s. William Satchell: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 86.

Satterlee, Satterley, Satterly, Saturley.—Local, 'of Satterley' or Satterleigh, a parish in co. Devon, near South Molton.

London, 0, 0, 0, 1; New York, 16, 1, 4, 0.

Satterthwaite, Satterthwait.

—Local, 'of Satterthwaite,' an ancient chapelry in High Furness, near Hawkshead. Small and secluded as is the spot, it has originated a surname that has spread far and wide. It seems to have reached London about the 16th century. But it is still familiar in the immediate district, as I can testify.

Saucemaker.—Occup. 'a maker of sauces'; v. Saucer.

Joan Sausemaker, co. York. W. 11.

Saucer.—Occup. 'the saucer,' i.e. a maker of saucers, a most important avocation in the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries, when some seasoning, like salt-pickle, for a relish was deemed a vital necessity. Hence saucer, a deep-rimmed plate, or shallow vessel, to hold sauce in. v. Saucemaker.

'Wo was his cook, but if his sauce were Pointant, and sharpe, and redy all his gere.' Chaucer, C. T. 352.

Saul, Saul.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Saul'; cf. Paul. This personal name was somewhat uncommon. (2) Local, 'at the saule' (i.e. Sale, q.v.), from residence therein as owner or servitor. O.E. sel, a hall; Fr. salle. The surname of the famous knight commemorated by Froissart (1332–48) is variously written de la Sale, de la Saule, de Aula, or de Halle (Notes and Queries, 1st S. v. 291). No doubt both (1) and (2) have contributed to our directories.

Sawer; v. Sawyer.

Sawkins, Sawkings.—Bapt. 'the son of Saer,' dim. Saykin, modified to Sawkin (v. Sayer). If we were sure that Saunderskin existed from Alexander, then naturally Sawkin would be the corruption. But -kin as a suffix was almost invariably added to a nick, monosyllable; and we have a clear case of the once great name of Saer becoming Saykin. The g in Sawkings is, of course, excrescent; cf. Jennings. The same individual is thus described:

Sawman.—Bapt. 'the son of Salmon,' i.e. Solomon. It is tempting to derive the name from O.F. saumon, English salmon, the fish, and make it a nickname, but this origin is improbable; v. Salman.

Saxon.—Local, 'of Saxton,' q.v. (2). I doubt not this is the true origin. That it means a Saxon by race and blood is chronologically absurd.

1669. Bapt.—John, s. Audery Saxson: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 239.

Sayer, Sayers.—Bapt. 'the son of Sayer,' also found as Sagar, Sigar, and Seger. A forgotten personal name that has left an indelible mark on our directories. From twenty to twenty-five surnames separately spelt are the offspring, and many have a large number of representatives. The name was popular so early as Domesday as Segar and Sigar, and Latinized as Sigarus. Siger de Frivile is found in the Hundred Rolls as Sizer, Saer, Sayer, and Seer (ii. 152, 514, 153, 523). The following surnames (amongst others) will be found in their proper place, unquestionable descendants of Siger or Sayer, viz. Seager, Seeger, Seaker, Sugar, Sugars, Siggers, Saggars, Sagar, Sager, Secker, Sear, Sears, Sear-son, Seare, Seares, Seear, Syer, and Syers. Also a dim. Saykin.

Sayles, Saile, Sales, Sayle.
—Local, 'at the sayles,' i.e. the hurdles (cf. Paliser, also a great Yorkshire surname). 'Sales,' the upright stakes of a hurdle' (Halliwell). The only instances I can find, ancient or modern, are in co. York. The name has remained there at least 500 years. But as an alternative, v. Sale.

Saylor, Sailor, Sailor.—Occup. 'the sailour,' a dancer, a hopper. 'Saille, to leap (A.N.), hence sailours, leapers, dancers' (Halliwell).

'There was many a timbestere,
And sailours that I dare well swere
Couthe hir craft full perfytly.'

Chaucer, R. of R. 769-71.

Sailor is a comparatively modern term for one who sails on the sea. Mariner (q.v.) was the term in general use. Dancer and Hopper are familiar surnames. Doubtless the surname concerns the dancer. Oddly enough, I cannot find the surname on English soil. It is a common name in the United States.

Scales.—Local, 'at the scales,' Norse scale, a shepherd's hut; cf. Scottish shealing (Taylor, p. 486). Hence Winterscale and Summerscales (q.v.). A hamlet in the parish of Aldingham, Furness, is called Scales. A farmstead in Ulverston parish is named Cockinsale, which gave rise to a surname corrupted to Cockinshell; cf. Portingscale, near Keswick. See, however, shale (Skeat's Dict.).

London, 2, 4; Boston (U.S.), 1, 0; New York, 0, 5.

Scamp.—? —. A curious name. Of course it has no connexion with the dictionary scamp. No doubt local.

Ilfracombe, 5.

Scampton.—Local, 'of Scampton,' a parish in co. Lincoln.

1705. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Francis Scampton: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 65.

1732. Married—John Leeson and Eliz. Scampton: ibid. p. 161.

MDb. (co. Leic.), 1; Philadelphia, 3.

Scarborough, Scarbrow, Scarboro.—Local, 'of Scarborough,' co. York.

1615. John Scarth, co. York: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 340.

1662. Married—John Milborne and Margery Scarfe: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 111.

1723. — James Wightman and Eliz. Scarfe: St. Mary Aldermay, p. 46.

London, 0, 1, 6, 2, 1; West Rid. (Yorks) Court Dir., 2, 1, 1, 0, 0; MDB. (North Rid. Yorks) Scarth, 10; Philadelphia (Scharf), 1.

Scatchard, Scatcherd, Scatcherd.—? Occup. 'the scatch-herd' (?). I cannot find the term in the dictionaries. Yorkshire, where the surname is chiefly found, has given us a large number of this class; cf. Calvert, Shepard, Oxenbird, Coward, Geldard, Stodart, Swinnart, Coulthard, all compounds of herd. Of course they were not all confined to that county. Scatchard is probably of this class, Scatcherd being a manifest corruption.

1753. Married—James Finch and Esther Scatchard: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 70. West Rid. Court Dir., 6, 2, 1; London, 1, 0, 0; Philadelphia, 8, 0, 0.

Scathlock, Scadlock.—Bapt. 'the son of Scathlock.' Found in the district of Sherwood Forest, where we should expect to find it.

'Readily Little John went forth,
And Scathlock went before.'

Robin Hood, i. 233.

Cf. Tuck, Littlejohn, and Hood.

Geoffrey Scatheloc, co. Notts, 1273. A. York, 0, 1; London, 0, 1.

Scatliff.—Local, 'of Scatliff,' in the parish of Rochdale, co. Lanc. Of course the suffix is -cliff; cf. Topliff for Topcliff, and Cunliffe for Cuncliffe.

1637. John Scatleffe and Mary Shakespare: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 233. London, 1.

Scattergood.—Personal, 'the son of Schatregod.' In my book on the Sources and Signification of English Surnames I placed this in the nickname class, and said that it implied a spendthrift. There can be no doubt that it was an old personal name, one of the very many that terminate in -god, -gode, -gaud, or -good. The surname has ramified strongly in the United States; cf. Osgood, Goodwin, &c.

Wimcot Schatregod, co. Bedf., 1273. A. Thomas Skatergoode. F.

Mathew Scatergude, co. York. W. 2. Richard Scatergood, Patent Roll, 3 Edw. VI. pt. v.

London, 2; West Rid. (Yorks) Court Dir., 2; Philadelphia, 49.

Scholar, Scholer, Schollard.—Occup. 'a scholar,' one belonging to a school, a learned man.

(Magister) Scholasticus, Jersey, 20 Edw. I. R.

1610. Edward Smith and Sarah Scoller: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 82.

1751. Married—Joseph Schollar and Grace Burgess: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 108.

1769. — William Scholar and Mary Roberts: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 189. New York, 1, 1, 0; Worcester (U.S.), 0, 0, 3.

Scholefield, Schofield, Scholfeld, Schoolfield.—Local, 'at the school-field.' A Lancashire surname, which has spread far and wide; cf. Scowcroft and Schoolcraft. Probably this field or croft was used as a playground. But I dare not pronounce definitely on this point. The plural form in Scholes (q.v.) is difficult to explain. The precise spot so termed seems to have been within the ancient parish of Rochdale, co. Lanc.

1596. Edmund Scholfield, of Middleton: Wills at Chester, i. 170.

1613. Alex. Scholfield, of Scholfield: ibid.

1623. Edmund Scholefield, of Saddleworth, ibid. ii. 193.

1663. Married—John Scofeild and Jone Hudson: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 112. London, 2, 19, 3, 0; West Rid. Court Dir., 27, 9, 5, 0; Manchester, 2, 42, 3, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 125, 0, 0; New York (Schoolfield), 2.

Scholes, Schoales.—Local, (1) 'at the school' or schools, from residence therein or thereby; cf. Scholefield, Schoolcraft, Scowcroft, &c.; v. Scholefield. Schoales is an American variant. (2) 'of Scholes,' a township in the parish of Barwick-in-Elmet, nine miles from Leeds, W. Rid. Yorks.

Johannes del Scholes, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 181.

Ricardus del Scholes, 1379: ibid. p. 195. Ricardus del Scoles, 1379: ibid. p. 67.

On page 195 of the same register is found the name of Hugh Alderscholes, a manifest local surname.

Robertus de Scolay, 1379: ibid.

Ricardus de Scolay, 1379: ibid. p. 103. 1581-2. Richard Scholey, co. Yorks.: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 116.

1735. Married—Beale Scholey and Mary Carr: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 263.

1784. — John Butler and Eliz. Schoolly: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 361.

London, 2, 2; West Rid. Court Dir., 4, 0; Sheffield, 4, 0; Philadelphia, 11, 0.

Schoolcraft.—Local, 'at the school-croft,' from residence in the school enclosure; v. Scowcroft.

A distinguished American, Henry Rowe Schoolcraft, both ethnologist and geologist (1793-1864), bore this name; v. Craft and Croft.

1681. John Schoulercroft and Judith Bythell: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 80.

Worcester (U.S.), 2.

Schoolfield; v. Scholefield, an American variant.

Schoolhouse.—Local, 'at the school-house,' from residence therein. This surname lingered on for several centuries, and may still exist.—Since writing this I find it has crossed the Atlantic.

Ralph atte Skolehus, co. Norf., 1273. A. 1534. Henry Scolehouse, alderman of Norwich: FF. iii. 208.

1615. Alice Scolows, Norwich: ibid. iv. 496.

Scissons.—Bapt.; v. Sisson. London, 1.

Slaster.—Occup. 'the slater' or 'slater,' with feminine suffix Scla-ster; cf. Brewster and Baxter. This form did not live, but as an occupative term malster does, which is quite as uncouth in sound.

Willelmus Carter, slaster, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 61.

Slater; v. Slater.

Scobell, Scoble; v. Scovell.

Scoffer.—Nick. 'the scoffer.'

Matilda le Scoffar, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 113.

Scoggins, Scoging.—Bapt. 'the son of Scogan.' Scoggins is the genitive; cf. Williams. The final g in Scoging is an excrescence; cf. Jennings. The surname still lives in cos. Norfolk and Suffolk.

Robert Scogan, co. Norf., 1357: FF. vii. 144.

Scolding, Skoulding.—?Local, 'of Shouldham' (?). These two variants seem more or less imitative of the dictionary word scolding.

Rein de Sculdeham, co. Norf., temp. Hen. II: FF. vii. 514.

William de Sculdharn, co. Norf., temp. Rich. I: ibid. ix. 178.

The next stage of corruption was Scoulden:

Robert Scoulden, common-councilman, Norwich, 1687: FF. iii. 423.

The last step was the imitative Scolding:

1654. Mr. Scolding, ensign, Norwich: FF. iii. 400.

London, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Suffolk), 1, 1.

Scorer, Scorrar.—Occup. (1) 'the scorer,' a military spy, a scouter of the country. 'The Kinge, beuge at Notyngham, and or he came there, sent the scorers al abowte the contries adjoynynge to aspie and serche yf any gaderyngs in any place were agaynst hym': Arrival of King Edward IVth (Halliwell). (2) 'The scorer,' one who scores or counts by notches, a tally-man, one who kept accounts.

1686. Robert Mosse and Ann Scoresby: Marriage Lic. (Faculty Office), p. 183. West Rid. Court Dir., 0, 2, 0; MDB. (co. Derby), 0, 0, 3.

Scotland.—Local, 'of Scotland'; cf. Britton, Ireland, Cornwall, Burgoyne, &c.

Simon Scotland, co. Norf., temp. Hen. IV: FF. viii. 504.

1801. Married—William Spencer and Ann Scotland: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 247. Boston (U.S.), 2.

Scotney.—Local, 'of Scotney.' An estate, with castle, in East Sussex, which belonged to the family in the 13th and 14th centuries. The first of the name on record is Walter de Scotney, steward of the Earl of Gloucester, temp. Henry III, who was hanged on a charge of attempting the life of his master (Blaauw's Barons' War, p. 61, quoted by Lower).

1750. Married—James Bracey Perry and Ann Scotton: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 185.

London, 1, 1; Philadelphia, 0, 1.

Scovell, Scobell, Scoble, Scovil, Scovill, Scoville.—Local, 'of Scoville.' Lower says, 'From Escoville, now Ecoville, in the arrondissement of Caen, in Normandy.' There can be little doubt that Scobell and Scoble are variants.

Roger de Schovill, co. Norf., Hen. III. Edw. I. K.

Scoweroft.—Local, 'of the school-croft,' i.e. the school enclosure (v. Croft); cf. Scholefield. In a copy of one of the Oldham papers several years ago, dealing with local matters, I noted the following:

Adam de Scolecroft, 6 Edw. III.

I have lost all other references, but it is clear that the estate from which the name was taken lay in the ancient parish of Oldham.

Thomas Taylor, of Scolecroft, parish of Oldham, 1588: Wills at Chester (1545-1620), p. 191.

Richard Scolecroft, of Farnworth, 1589: ibid. p. 170.

Richard Scoweroft, of Haugh, co. Lanc., husbandman, 1689: ibid. (1681-1700), p. 347.

Eliz. Scolecroft, of Haulgh (Bolton-le-Moors), 1690, ibid.

These last two belonged to the same family. It may be taken for granted that the change to Scoweroft became established orthographically about the year 1700. The pronunciation would be much older.

1609. Married—Stephen Scocrofte and Grace Creycall: St. Mary Aldermar, p. 11.

Manchester, 2; Bolton, 6; Philadelphia, 1.

Scraggs; v. Scroggs.

Scratcherd.—Occup. (?) A corruption of Scatchard, q.v.

Scrimgeour, Scrymgeour, Scrimiger, Scrymigar.—Offic. 'the scrimmager'; v. Skirmisher.

London, 3, 6; West Rid. Court Dir., 3, 0; New York, 2, 0.

Scerymigar, Scrymser; v. Skirmisher.

Seudamore, Skidmore.—Local, 'of Scudamore.' I cannot trace the exact spot, but probably it will be found in the south-west of England. 'Walter de Scudamore was lord of Upton, co. Wilts, in the reign of Stephen' (Lower). Skidmore was an early variant, as the following spellings of the name of one and the same individual will show:

Walter de Scudamore, 1316. M.
Walter de Skydemore, 1319. M.
Wauter de Skidemore, 1321. M.
Petrus de Skidemore, co. Wilts, 1273. A.
Godfrey de Skidemore, co. Wilts, ibid.

The family motto is imitative, 'Scuto Amoris Divini,' but to derive on this account the name from O.F. escu d'amour is out of the question. The origin is manifestly local. Mottoes are made to fit names, not names mottoes. Surnames precede mottoes.

1596. Henry Seudamore and Joane Howe: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 231.
1657. Bapt.—Mary, d. Thomas Skidmore: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 198.

Scudder; v. Skudder.

Sculthorpe.—Local, 'of Sculthorpe,' a parish in co. Norfolk.

1325. John de Sculthorp, rector of Testerton, co. Norf.: FF. vii. 197.
1752. Buried—Mary Sculthorp: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 300.
1798. Married—John Sculthorpe and Esther Millward: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 181.

John Scurry, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid. p. 206.
London, 1, o; Abingdon, o, 1.

Seutt.—Nick, 'the Scot.' The temptation is strong to make Scut a variation of Schet or Sket (v. Skeate), especially as the counties referred to below comprise the district in which that name was familiar. But 'le Scut' forbids the idea.

John Scut, co. Norf., ibid.
1807. Married—Thomas Scutt and Mary White: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 366.
London, 3.

Seaber.—Bapt. 'the son of Sigborg,' modulated to Siber and Seber (v. Yonge's Christian Names, ii. 310). The surname is still familiar to co. Cambridge, where it is found six centuries ago; cf. the local Sebergham, a parish in co. Cumb., i.e. the ham or home of Seberg.

—Margaret Seddon, of Winwick: ibid. Manchester, 17; MDB. (co. Ches.), 4;

London, 1; Philadelphia, 8.

Sedgwick, Sidgwick.—Local, 'of Sedgwick,' a township in the parish of Heversham, four miles from Kendal, co. Westm. The surname has ramified strongly. The prefix is evidently the personal name of the first settler in the wick (v. Wike) and a compound of sig; cf. Sigismund, Sigmund, Sigward, Sigwald (v. Miss Yonge, i. cxxiii); cf. also Segar and Sayer.

Seear.—Bapt. 'the son of Sayer'; v. Sear. This is quite a modern variant—one more surname that owns the famous Segar for its parent.

1805. Married.—Thomas Seear and Kezia Ivory: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 328.
London, 8.

Seeger; v. Seager.

Seekins, Seekings.—Bapt. 'the son of Segin.' This personal name, in early records almost peculiar to Cambridgeshire, seems to have settled down into Seekins, the final s being patronymic as in Williams, the g in Seekings being an excrement as in Jennings.

Richard Segin, co. Linc., 1273. A.
Alan Segin, co. Camb., ibid.
John Segyn, co. Camb., ibid.

Also spelt Segeyn. It is interesting to note that the surname is still well-nigh confined to co. Cambridge.

1757. Married.—Thomas Seekins and Mary Wilkins: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 74.
Cambridge, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Cambridge), 1, 1; London, 1, 0.

Seeley, Seelie, Seely, Sealey, Sealy, Seelye.—(1) Nick. 'the seely,' the simple, the innocent, the harmless; cf. Simple. 'Seely = simple, silly' (Halliwell).

'This sely carpenter beginneth quaketh.'

Selkirk.—Local, 'of Selkirk,' the county town of Selkirkshire.

London, 1; Philadelphia, 5.

Sellar(s); v. Seller(s).

Selleck, Sellick.—Local, 'of Sellack,' a parish in co. Hereford, near Ross. The following entries are quite sufficient to prove the derivation:

1603. John Sellack, co. Somerset: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 265.

A note appended says: 'Sellack. There was a family of Selleckes at Lydiard St. Lawrence, Somerset.'

1595. Nicholas Sellecke, or Sellick, co. Somerset: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 209.

 London, 2; New York, 2.

Selth, Self, Selfe.—Bapt. 'the son of Seletch.' The order of corruption was very simple, as follows: Seletch, Selth, and Self or Selfe. But for a second derivation, v. Self. Nevertheless, Seletch was so popular that it must have made its mark on our permanent nomenclature, and I doubt not Selth, Self, and Selfe are its offsprings.

Senior, Senier, Seanor, Saynor, Synyer.—Nick. 'the senior,' i.e. the older of two or more persons, generally of the same personal name. This mode of expression is as early as the 13th and 14th centuries, and is very commonly found in the Yorkshire Poll Tax, 1379. The cause is simple. John was so popular that not only father and son, but two and three brothers would often bear the name. For instances, v. my Curiosities of Puritan Nomenclature, pp. 4, 5.

Sennett, Sennitt, Synnot, Sunnett, Sennott, Sinnott, Sinnett, Synett, Synnott, Synnet, Sennet.—Bapt. 'the son of Senot' or Sunot. A girl's name, but it is not mentioned in Miss Yonge's book, and I can glean no more of its history than what is recorded below. Its place as a feminine baptismal name is well marked, and that it has obtained permanent surnominal honours our directories fully prove.

of the law, a policeman. Few surnames have undergone more varieties of spelling than this. Even in our latest dictionaries two forms are recognized. Agreeing with O.F.

Sewer.—Offic. 'the sewer,' an officer who brought in and took away the dishes, one who superintended the 'courses' at table, from O.F. sevre, suir, to follow.

A substantive 'sewes,' dishes, is found in Chaucer, who, describing the rich feasts of Cambuscan, King of Tartary, says time would fail him to tell

'Of their strange sewes,' which may be from the same root.

But see Skeat, sewer (2), and

Seymour, Seymer, Seamer.—Local, (1) 'of St. Maur,' some forgotten chapelry in Normandy. Local, (2) 'of Semer,' a parish in co. Suffolk. Bapt. (3) 'the son of Semar' (i.e. Sigmar; v. Yonge, ii. 311). All these various names must inevitably be mixed now, the tendency being towards the aristocratic Seymour; v. Seamer for a further derivation.

Shackel, Shackell, Shackells, Shackel, Shackell, Shackle.—Bapt. 'the son of Shakell'; cf. the local Shackleton, i.e. the settlement of Shakell, also Shackelford and Shackerley, the latter probably standing for Shackle-ley.

The Vicarage of Corpesty, co. Norf., 'was sold by Heydon to Thomas Jecks and John Shakle, and by them to the Bacons,' 1611: FF. vi. 365.

This form still remains in Norfolk, Shackle being found in the Modern Domesday Book for that county.

Shacklady.—? Local, 'of Shacklerley' (?); v. Shakerley. 'Known in Lancashire as a corruption of the ancient local surname of Shacklerley' (Lower). I believe this solution to be the true one. The two surnames have run side by side for many generations. Probably Shackerley was originally Shackel-ley, i.e. the field that belonged to Shackel, the first settler (v. Shackel). This would readily corrupt into Shacklady.

Shakespear, Shakespeare. — Nick. 'a spearman.' William Shakespere (V. 1); cf. Simon Shakelok (M.), i.e. Shake-lock. Henry Shakelaunce, 1273 (A.), i.e. Shake-lance. Hugh Shakeshaft (Eng. Sur., 2nd edit., p. 461), i.e. Shake-shaft. It is impossible to retail all the nonsense that has been written about this name. Silly guessing has run riot on the subject. Never a name in English nomenclature so simple or so certain in its origin. It is exactly what it looks — Shakespear; one of a class of nicknames, nearly all of which have come down to today because that which was derivative in them had been soon forgotten, and they had become almost accepted as official. 'Catch-poll' (q.v.) actually attained the honours of an authorized and official title. A serjeant who cleared the way was equally well known as 'Draw-sword' (q.v.), a bailiff as 'Wag-staff,' a huntsman as 'Wag-horn,' a jailer as 'Shake-lock,' a pikeman or spearman as 'Shake-lance' and 'Shake-spear,' and a well-known bird, from its customary habit, as a 'Wag-tail.' Wag and shake were the chief elements in these vigorous sobriquets; v. names under Wag- and Shake-, and for others, not in our nomenclature, v. Halliwell.

1747. Married — John Sharman and Mary Mason: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 80.

New York, 2.

Sharp, Sharpe. — Nick. 'the sharp,' the quick, keen, cutting. Naturally this was a sobriquet likely to be handed down as being complimentary. Several instances have lately cropped up where the child has received the baptismal name Luke, which looks as if a little humour were intended.

1642. Bapt.—John, s. William Sherrington: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 152.

1662. Buried—Eliz., d. William Sherrington: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 214.

London, 4.

Sherston, Sherson.—Local, 'of Sherston,' two parishes in co. Wilts.

Thomas Sherston, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 231.

1560. Married—Thomas Sherson and Ellen Vintner: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 225.

With this entry, cf. Kelson for Kelston, &c. These modified forms are as natural as they are common.

London, 1, 1.

Sherwell, Sherwill, Sherwill.—Local, 'of Sherwill,' a parish in co. Devon, four miles from Barnstaple.

1789. Married—Ralph Shervill and Mary Clarke: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 29.

MDB. (co. Devon), 3, 0, 1; London, 3, 0, 2.

Sherwin.—Bapt. 'the son of Sherwin.' One of the many personal names ending in -win; cf. Unwin, Baldwin, Godwin. The d in my instances is, no doubt, excrescent, as in Simmonds or Hammond; v. Sherrin.

London, 3, 0, 0; Sheffield, 0, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Leic.), 9, 0, 1; Philadelphia, 1, 0, 0.

Shildrick.—Nick.; v. Sheldrake.

Shilito, Shillito, Shillitoe, Shilleto, Shillitto.—? Local, 'of Selito' (?). This great Yorkshire name completely baffles me. Probably, like Sholto (co. Northumberland), the suffix is -how (v. How, 2), in which case, of course, the name is local. But I cannot identify the spot, and there is no prefix de to the instances. No entry is found in any of the great rolls, like the Testa de Neville, the Hundred Rolls, or the Placita quo Warranto.

Shilling.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Shilwin' or Schilling. Lower says, 'Schelin, Schelinus, a Domesday personal name.' Probably most of our Shillings descend from an old personal name Shilwin, one of the endless names with suffix -win; cf. Sherwin and Sherring, or Goldwin and Golding. (2) Local, 'of Schilling.' I cannot find the spot.

London, 4; Philadelphia, 9.

Shillingford.—Local, 'of Shillingford,' parishes in co. Berks and Devon. Probably originally Killingford; v. Killingsworth, where such variants as Chillingworth and Shillingsworth are mentioned.

1663. Charles Shillingford, alias Izard, and Mary Pryor: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 99.

London, 7; Oxford, 1; Philadelphia, 6.

Shillingsworth.—Local; v. Killingsworth.

1753. Married—George Smedley and Elizabeth Shillingsworth.

Shillito, &c.; v. Shilito.

Shilston, Shillson.—Local, 'of Shillingston,' a parish in co. Dorset. It is almost certain that these are variants. With Shillson, cf. Kelson for Kelston.

1689. John Chilston (or Shilston) and Ann Brady: Marriage Alleg. (Cant.), p. 111.
1801. Married—James Cormick and Sarah Shilstone: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 236.
MDB. (co. Devon), 2, 1; London, 1, 0.

Shimeld; v. Shemeld.

Shingler.—Occur. 'the shingler,' a tiler. Shingles were square-shaped wooden tiles for the roofs of houses. Langland speaks of Noah's ark as the 'shyngled ship.'

'Flouren cakes beth the schingles alle
Of cherche, cloister, boure, and halle.'
Halliwell.

In a statute (1563) relating to the apprenticeship of children, reference is made to the occupations of 'Tyler, Slater, Healyer, Tile-maker, Thatcher or Shingler' (5 Eliz. c. 4, 23). All these represent different modes of roofing houses, and are familiar surnames to-day. v. Hillier.

1747. Bapt.—Anne, d. Thomas Shingler: St. Mary Aldermay (London), p. 130.
1767. Married—Thomas Shingler and Ann Selby: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 170.
London, 1; MDB. (co. Ches.), 1.

Shinn.—Local. This is clearly a variant of Chinn (v. Ching'). Both hail from co. Cambridge.

1620. Buried—Mary Shinn: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iv. 104.

1803. Married—Benjamin Hardwick Shinn and Eliz. Knight Ayres: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 287.

1800. — William Shinn and Mary Nichols: ibid. p. 402.
MDB. (co. Camb.), 3; Philadelphia, 62.

Shipley; v. Shepley.

Boston (U.S.), 2.

Shipman.—Occur. 'the shipman,' a sailor, one who worked aboard a ship. 'Schypmanne, navita': Prompt. Parv. I cannot find Sailor in our nomenclature; Mariner and Shipman were the usual terms.

'A shipman was ther woned fer by West, ..
He knew wel alle the havens as they were,
Fro' Gotland to the Cape de Finisterre.'

London, 5; MDB. (co. Derby), 7.

Shipwash.—Local, 'at the sheepwash.' There is a spot called Sheepwash near Waterhead, Oldham, co. Lanc. Probably many small localities would obtain this name, being favourite places for sheep-washing. Any one living beside such a running pool would readily be termed 'Robert at the sheepwash.'

1657. Bapt.—Joseph, s. Adrey Sheepwash: St. Mary Aldermay (London), p. 96.

John Shipwash, 1725: Reg. Canterbury Cath. p. 76.

1800. Married—Robert Shipwash and Mary Barlow: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 217.
London, 1.

Shipway, Sheepway.—(1) Local, 'of Shepway,' one of the lathes, or great divisions of the county of Kent (Lower). This is confirmed by the following entry:

Ballivus (the bailiff) de Shipweye, co. Kent, 1273. A.

(2) Local, 'at the sheep-way,' from residence along the track trod by the sheep; cf. Greenway, Hathway, Otway, &c.

London, 3.

Shird, Shirt, Shard.—Local, 'of the Sherd,' a place in Disley, in the parish of Stockport. Sherds of Sherd existed at an early period, and the junior branches spread into Lancashire, Derbyshire, and beyond. As for the meaning of Sherd, cf. 'shard,' an opening in a wood. Yorkshire' (Halliwell). 'Shard,' a gap in a fence. Var. dial. (ibid.). That Shirt is the modern imitative corruption of the surname is manifest.

Shmith.—Occup. 'the smith,' q.v. Perhaps englished out of the German Schmidt.
 London, 2.

Shobbrook, Shoebrook, Shubrick, Shubrook, Shuebruk.—Local, 'of Shobrooke,' a parish in co. Devon, two miles from Crediton.

MDb. (co. Devon), 2, 1, 0, 0, 0; London, 0, 0, 1, 3, 0; Boston (Shuebruk), 1.

Shoebeggar.—Nick. 'a beggar of old shoes.' The occupation is not extinct.

Simon le Shobegg'e, co. Camb., 1273. A.

Shoebotham.—Local. Almost all our surnames in -botham come from East Cheshire; v. Shufflebotham and Higginbotham; v. also Botham.

1605. Married—Thomas Potter and Margerie Showbothom: Reg. Prestbury, co. Ches., p. 167.
 Manchester, 2.

Shoemaker.—Occup. 'the shoemaker'; rare, the general trade-names were Souter and Cordwaner. Christopher Shoemaker was burnt at Newbury (1518), according to Foxe. Harry Shoemaker was an attendant upon the Princess Mary (1542); v. Privy Purse Expenses, p. 2. In the Chester Mystery the 'Corvesters and Shoemakers' marched together (Ormerod's Cheshire, p. 301).

1581. Married—Thomas Shomaker: Reg. St. Columb Major, p. 141.

Almost all the American Shoemakers are of German extraction.

Philadelphia, 178.

Shoesmith, Shoosmith, Shuxsmith, Sucksmith, Sixsmith, Shucksmith.—Occup. 'the shoemith,' a maker of horse-shoes, a farrier. Sixsmith may be a corruption of sickle-smith (v. Sucksmith); but it is probable, however strange it may appear, that all the above names are changes rung upon Shoesmith. Having once reached Sucksmith, the final step to Sixsmith was easy.

Shortshank.—Nick. 'short-shank,' with short legs; cf. Sheepshank, Longshank, Philipshank. Sheepshank has survived, not so the others. Yorkshire seems to have been the district of these sobriquets.

Johannes Shortshank, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 54.

Shott, Shot.—(1) Nick. 'the Scot'; cf. Shutt and Scutt. The two entries following are placed together:

Johannes Schote, et Matilda uxor ejus, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 109.
Sissot Scote, 1379: ibid.

(2) Local; v. Shutt and Shute.

Shotter.—Nick.; v. Shorter, of which it is probably a variant.

1765. Married—James Shotter and Mary Anderson: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 157.
London, 2; New York, 1.

Shoulding; v. Shuldham.

Shoveller, Showler, Shouler.—Occup. 'the shoveler,' one who shovels with a spade; cf. Dicker. Showl is dialectic for shovel:

'Who'll dig his grave?
I says the owl:
With my spade and showl
I'll dig his grave.'

1683. Edward Mecum and Ann Shrubshall: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 154.

London, 3, 1; Sheffield, 1, 0.

Shubrick, Shubbrook.—Local; v. Shobbrook.

Shufflebotham, Shuffle-bottom.—Local, 'of Shippalbothom,' evidently some small spot in the ancient parish of Bury, co. Lanc., or the near neighbourhood. Like Higginbottom, Sidebotham, and several other local surnames with the suffix -bottom (v. Botham), Shufflebotham has East Cheshire or South-east Lancashire for its native home. The several stages of corruption after Shippobotham are Shifabottom and the imitative Shufflebotham. In the light of the subjoined entries, the assertion that the origin is Shaw-field-bottom (Lower) falls to the ground.

1582. Married—John Shippobotham and Anne Wilkynson: Reg. Prestbury (East Ches.), p. 74.

1587. Bapt.—Edwarde Shippobothom: ibid. p. 92.

1626. Married—Charles Shifabothom and Jone Horderne: ibid. p. 256.

Evidently the place is referred to in the following list of 'messuages, lands and rents' in 'Walton, Lancaster, Wigan, Haughton, Skelmersdale, . . . Bury, Cheetham, Cheetwood, Tottington, Undesworth, Salford, Shuttleworth, Shippalbothan, Middleton,' &c.: (1485) Baines' Lanc. i. 516.—Since writing the above I find the following references to this family, conclusively proving my points:

James Shepobotham, of Heap, Bury, 1570: Wills at Chester (1545-1620), p. 174.

George Shupplebotham, of the parish of Bury, 1621: ibid. (1621-50), p. 198.

Richard Shufflebotham, of Betchton, 1674: ibid. (1651-80), p. 243.

The place itself also acquired the same form:

 Philadelphia, 2.

Sibary, Sibray, Sibery, Sybry.—Bapt. 'the son of Sibry,' probably, and almost positively, a corruption of Sibley, the recognized popular form of Sybil; v. Sibley. Sybil was one of the greatest favourites in co. Yorks at the surname era, and it flourished there in every possible form. The corruption is a perfectly natural one.

Sidebotham, Sidebottom.—Local, 'of the Side-bottom,' probably the side of the hollow, or bottom, as was the term in cos. Yorks, Lanc., and Cheshire, where most of the Ramsbottoms, Higginbothams, &c., spring from; v. Botham. Like Higginbotham, Sidebotham springs from the immediate neighbourhood of Stockport.

Sidney, Sydney.—Local, 'de St. Denis' (?). This is the generally accepted derivation, and I doubt not it is the true one. Lower says, 'The founder of this family in England was Sir William Sydney, Chamberlain of Henry II, who came from Anjou with that monarch, and was buried at Lewes Priory in 1188': Patr. Brit. p. 337. Like Chauncy and Washington in the United States, Sidney and Percy have been turned into baptismal names in England. Sydney has also given title to one of the great cities of Australia.

Sigs.—Bapt. 'the son of Sigg,' found in such compounds as Sigismund, Sigfrid, Sigward, Sigwald, Sigurd, &c. The genitive of Sigg is Siggs; cf. William and Williams.

Sigge de Anemere, co. Norf., 1273. A. 1791. Married—Moses Siggs and Sarah Wood: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 66. London, 1.

Sikes.—Local; v. Sykes.

Silcock, Silcocks, Silcox.—Bapt. 'the son of Cecil,' nick. Sill (less commonly Cill), with terminative -cock (v. Introd. p. 25). It would appear that to preserve a distinction between the popular fem. Cecilia and masc. Cecil, the nick. of the former was Siss (v. Sisson and Sissot), and of the latter, Sil or Sill; v. Silson.

Cf. Johannes Cyllson, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 269.

I have not yet found a single Silas in mediaeval records. Mr. Lower's suggested origination from this Apostolic name, which I carelessly accepted in my English Surnames, is out of the question. The name was unknown. Of course Silcocks or Silcox is the genitive form; cf. William and Williams, or Wilcock and Wilcocks, or Wilcox.

Simes; v. Sim.

Simister.—(1) Official (?), 'the summer.' I will first furnish instances.

William Sumaster. Z.
William Summayster. B.
John Somayster. F.
William Summaster. Z.

Query (1), a summaster, i.e. chamberlain or clerk of expenses; (2) a summister, one who summarizes, abridges writings, &c. This is most probable, as the word occurs twice at least: 'Over this, if the historian be long, he is accomplished a trifer; if he be short, he is taken for a summister' (Holinshed, Chron. Ireland, p. 80). 'And thus, though rudely, have I plaid the summister' (The Meane in Spending, 1598): both quoted by Halliwell. The name occurs in Mun. Acad. Oxon. (1462) as head of 'Sykyll Halle' (v. English Surnames, 5th edit., p. 206). Simister is a well-known North-English surname.

MDB. (co. Hereford), 5

Siss.—Bapt. 'the son of Cecilia,' from the nick. Ciss, Cess, and Siss. This form lasted till the 17th century, and still exists as Sissy in the nursery. Such rhymes as the following will be commonly met with in D'Urfev:

'Long have I lived a bachelor's life,
And had no mind to marry;
But now I would fain have a wife,
Edith, Doll, Kate, Sis, or Mary.'

'Cesse the southeresse' (v. Sisson for quotation). Almost all the instances of names founded on Siss given below come from Yorkshire and its border. A great impetus was given to it there on account of Cicely Neville, the Rose of Raby, 'proud Ciss,' 'the Duchess of York' (v. Yonge, i. 310). The Conqueror's daughter, Cecily, Abbess of Caen, gave it favour still earlier to the country at large.

The nearest modern approach to the original is Sississon, found, as might be expected, in Yorkshire. Nevertheless, I am surprised that more descendants of this once common pet-name are not in existence as surnames in the 19th century. v. Sisterson.

Hull, 0, 0, 1, 0; New York (Sisserson), 2.

Sisterson.—Bapt. 'the son of Cecilia,' from the nick. Siss, dim. Sissot. Thus Sissotson became by imitation Sisterson. There can be no doubt about this origin. It is found in the very district where Sissotson arose and became familiar (v. Sissotson and Sissot). Any idea that it means a nephew, i.e. sister's son, must be discarded. The form is simply imitative; cf. Ibberson for Ibbotson from Isabella.

Corbridge-on-Tyne, 2.

Siewwright, Siewwright.—Occup. 'the siewwright,' a maker of sieves (v. Sivier). M.E. sive.

Skirmisher, Skrimshire, Scrimshaw, Scrimgeoure, Scrymgeour, Scrimiger, Scrymsier, Scrymigar.—Offic. 'the skirmisher,' a fencer. O.F. eskirmir, to fence. O.F. escarmouche, a skirmish, hence English scrimmage, and the form scrimgeour, i. e. scrimmager, one who mingled in a scrimmage.

'Oe nul teigne Escole de Eskermerye, ne de Bokeler deins la citee.'

Liber Albus.

Scrimmage was in early use, and is not in any true sense provincial. Lower quotes Crawford's Scottish Peerage as follows : 'Alexander I, by special grant, appointed a member of the Carron family, to whom he gave the name of Scrimgeour, for his valour in a sharp fight, to the office of hereditary standard-bearer.' This settles any doubt, if any doubt existed; v. Patr. Brit. p. 307.

Slagg; v. Slack.

Slope.—Local, 'at the slope' (i.e. a shelving declivity), from residence thereby. A slope, a slope, or a slope seem all to express the same meaning. In Oxfordshire the shelving bank between the base of a fortification and the moat below is a slope. In Cumberland a farmer will say of the roads in frosty weather, 'They're terrible slope to-day,' i.e. slippery.

Slaymaker.—Occup. 'the slaymaker,' a maker of slays (v. Slaywright). "‘Slay, an instrument belonging to a weaver's loom that has teeth like a comb': Phillips, '‘Slay, a weaver's tole." Palsgrave (Skeat). The weaver's reed. A petition to Parliament in 1467 from the worsted manufacturers complains that in the county of Norfolk there are 'divers persones that make untrue ware of all manner of worstedes, not being of the assises in length or brede . . . and that the slayes and yern thereto belonging are untruly made and wrought' (Rot. Parl. Edw. IV.).

Smilter; v. Smelter.

Smirthwaite; v. Smurthwaite.

Smith, Smyth, Smythe. — Occup. 'the smith.' Common to every village in England, north, south, east, and west. The y in Smyth is the almost invariable spelling in early rolls, so that it cannot exactly be styled a modern affectation. There are 300,000 Smiths in England; very different from the state of Israel, when 'there was no smith found throughout all the land of Israel' (1 Sam. xiii. 19). This always seems to me the hardest verse in the Bible to read in Church without smiling; the most difficult, with regard to proper emphasis, being Luke xxiv. 25.

Smithett. — Local, 'of Smurthwaite,' one of the many localities in cos. Cumberland, Westmoreland, and North Lancashire whose suffix is -thwaite (v. Thwaite). The first stage of corruption was Smuthwaite, the second Smithwaite. This became Smithett just as Smithwick became Smithick; v. Smorffitt, Smithwaite, Smurthwaite. In my late parish (Ulverston) Poslet represents Postlethwaite.

Smithies, Smithers, Smithyes, Smither, Smythers, Smythies, Smithe. — (1) Local, 'at the smithy,' with suffix (perhaps patronymic) s, as in Brooks, Styles, &c. Smithers is a vulgar corruption. (2) Local, 'of Smethurst.' It seems almost certain that Smithers is more generally a corruption of Smethurst (v. Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 384). No doubt the two are mixed.

Snazle, Snazel, Snazell.

Local, (1) 'of Kneesall,' a parish in the dioc. of Lincoln; (2) 'of Knettishall,' a parish in the dioc. of Norwich. There was evidently a difficulty in pronouncing the last local term. It would readily corrupt. It is quite possible that the Lincolnshire surname Snushall is a corruption of (1); cf. Sturges for Thurgis, and v. Spurdance.

Snell.—Bapt. 'the son of Snel.' This name is found in the Hundred Rolls as a single personal name, a strong argument in favour of a fontal origin. If not so, it must be a nickname. 'Snell, sharp, keen, piercing. Cumberland.

Snod.—? Bapt. 'the son of Snod.' Snod is found as a single personal name in the Hundred Rolls; cf. the local Snodgrass, where the prefix is probably the original settler's personal name.

Snodgrass.—Local, 'at the snodgrass,' from residence thereby. 'Snod,' smooth, demure' (Halliwell). But v. Snoad for another derivation of the prefix. The surname is far more commonly found in the United States than in England.

1730. Married—Andrew Snotgrass and Ann Cressum: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 321.

The name of Snodgrass occurs in the Cheltenham register, Aug. 1863 (N. and Q., Dec. 4, 1886).

Snodin.—Local, 'of Snowdon'; v. Snowden. The following seems a very conclusive instance. It is clearly the half-stage of the corrupted form:

1573. John Snodon: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 25.
 London, 3.

Snook, Snooke, Snooks.—Local, 'of Sevenoaks' (?), a market-town and parish in co. Kent. Mr. Lower says, 'The Kentish town is usually pronounced Se'noaks.' 'The further contraction, coupled with the phonetic spelling of former days, easily passed into Snooks. Messrs. Sharp and Harrison, solicitors of Southampton, had in their possession a series of deeds in which all the modes of spelling occur, from Sevenoakes down to S'noke, in connection with a family now known as Snooks' (Notes and Queries, 1st S. v. p. 438, quoted by Lower). 'A Sussex family in the early part of the last century bore the name of Snooke. Sevenoke, the early orthography of the town, has also been modified into Sinnock and Cennick' (Lower).

Snow.—Personal or, as we should now say, baptismal, 'the son of Snow'; cf. Winter, Frost, and such ecclesiastical seasons (as distinct from the natural) as Pentecost, Nowell, Pask, Whitsunday, or Midwinter. A name given originally to a child born in the time of snow. The practice is repeated to-day. A clergyman wrote to me some time ago to say he had just baptized a child by the name of Sou'-wester. This turned out to be the father's Christian name, who was born on board ship in a sou'-westerly gale.

Sojourner.—Nick. or occup. 'the sojourner.' This surname I have only met with in North Lancashire, between Preston and the Duddon Sands. For centuries it appears in the Ulverston and Dalton registers as Suggener, and in that form a charity was left to the poor of the latter parish. In the Preston Guild Rolls occurs 'John Sojourner, butter-maker,' 1622 (p. 89). Possibly the Sojourner was, like Tasker, a worker by the day or job, a day-labourer, as we now say. If we take it in its accepted sense it will denote a new-comer, who from a passing visitor has become a settler. It is suggested in N. and Q. (Sept. 17, 1887) that the French Sigourney, or Sigournai, is of the same origin.

1547. Married—Thomas Asburner and Elisabeth Suggener: Reg. Parish Ch., Ulverston, p. 4.

Sokerel.—Nick. 'the sokerel.' 'Sokerel, a child not weaned' (Halliwell). A very likely sobriquet for a simple and silly fellow. Cf. Suckling.

Richard Sokerel, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 155.

Sole, Soles.—Local, 'at the sole,' i.e. pond. 'Sole, a pond. Co. Kent' (Halliwell). This solution is proved by the instances furnished below:

Solloway, Solway.—Local, 'at the sale-way.' This surname, so familiar to Oxford citizens, hails from co. Somerset. Its derivation is very simple. The original bearer of the name lived on the way that led to the sale, or hall (v. Sale). For change to o, cf. Salomon and Solomon. For the change into three syllables (for euphony), cf. Ottaway, Greenaway, Hathaway, in place of Ottway, Greenway, and Hathway.

Solman, Solomon, Solomans, Solomon, Solomons.—Bapt. 'the son of Solomon.' The first o is very rare in early records. The spelling is almost invariably Saloman. A large proportion of the Solomons in the London Directory represents the modern Jewish invasion, as the personal names attached to them will sufficiently prove, not to mention the occupations; v. Salman for the old English representatives of a once popular fontal name.

survival of a probably rare personal name. Mr. Lower says Somerlad, Thane of Argyle, living in the 12th century, was founder of the Clan Macdonald (Patr. Brit. p. 323).

says, 'A thithing near Reading, co.

Berks' (Patr. Brit. p. 324). There is also Southcoates, a township in the parish of Drypool, E. Rid.

Yorks. In spite of this it is probable that the surname is of Devonshire descent, and represents some estate in that county bearing this name, -cote (an enclosure) being a common West-England suffix.

London, 2, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 12, 0, 0.

Sowerbutts, Sourbutts.—? Local. This looks very like a nickname. A brewer of bad beer would easily acquire the title. Nevertheless, it may be but a compound of butt, a mark to shoot at, and represent some long-forgotten spot. It is a Lancashire surname, and is still familiar to that county. It sprang up in the neighbourhood of Preston.

Robert Sowerbutts, 1682: Preston Guild Rolls, p. 177.

James Sowerbutts, 1682: ibid.

The earlier form is found in the following:

William Sowerbutt, of Cadate Field (Preston), 1559.

Cecilia Sorbutt, of Chepyn, 1562.

In the same record a hundred years later appears:

London, 2, 3; MDB. (co. Camb.), 1, 2.

Speed, Speedy.—? Bapt. Probably a font-name, wishing prosperity or good-speed to the child. The original meaning of speed is 'success.' If not this, it must be a nickname, significant of the quick, hasty movements of the first ancestor. If baptismal, Speedy is but a pet-form, as in the case of Charlie, Tommy, Willy, &c.

(2) Nick. Lower says, 'The Spekes of Somersetshire descend from Richard le Espek, who lived in the reign of Henry II. Wemworthy and Brampton, in Devonshire, were the original seats; but temp. Hen. VI Sir John Speke married the heiress of Beauchamp, and so obtained Whitelackington, co. Somerset': Patr. Brit. p. 325. This surname has a distinct origin. It stands for 'le speke,' the woodpecker, and is a nickname of the same class as Nightingale, Lark, Sparrowhawk, &c. (v. Geraldus Cambrensis, vi. 125). For an early instance v. Speck, which is but a variant of the same name.

1701. Bapt. — Samuel, s. Richard Speake: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 1.

Speller, Spellar.—Occup. 'the speller.' Probably refers to the teacher, not the taught. One who spells the letters for the child to learn (v. Grammer). 'Spellare, sillabicator': Prompt. Parv. If the earlier sense of spell, a discourse, a story, originated the name, then the speller would be a professional story-teller. The surnames Speller and Spelman, q.v., are now well established.

Spelman, Spellman.—Bapt. 'the son of Spileman.' I am much tempted to set the name beside Speller, but saving in one or two cases all the entries have it Spileman, without prefix le. I think it must go as a personal name with Bateman, Tiddiman, &c. Cf. the German Spielmann; v. Speakman.

Spencer, Spenser.—Offic. A house-steward, one who, strictly speaking, had charge of the buttery or spence. In the Sumner's Tale the glutton is well described as:

'All vinolent as botel in the spence.'

while Mr. Halliwell quotes:

'Yet had I lever she and I
Were both together secretly
In some corner in the spence.'

In an inventory of household goods, dated 1574, I find the furniture of the hall first described, and this begins: 'A cupboard and a spence, 20s.' (Richmondshire Wills, p. 248). The office of 'la despencer' or 'la spencer' was amongst the highest in the king's household, and proportionately great among the barons. Practically such a name as 'Thomas de la Spence' was as official as 'Thomas la Spencer,' but, as in similar instances elsewhere, I have set it down as local.

Sperling, Sperlings, Spirling, Spillins, Spurling, Spillin.—Bapt. 'the son of Spirling,' one of the endless suffixes in -ing; cf. Browning, Harding, &c. The s in Sperlings and Spillings is the genitive, as in Williams, Jones, Simmonds, &c. The only other possible origin is a nickname; German sperling, a sparrow.

Benedict Spichfat, C. R., 6 Edw. III.

Robert Spichfat. W.

William Spichfat. W. II.

These represent separate districts, north and south. 'Spyk, or set flesche (spike of fleshe), popa'; Prompt. Parv. 'A spycke of a bacon flycke': Skelton, quoted by Halliwell; cf. Hogsflesh and Pigsflesh (q.v.). Found as Pichfatt.

Sprigg, Spriggs.—Bapt. 'the son of Sprig,' very probably a nick. of the personal name, Sprigin (v. Spriggin). This is the more likely as Sprigg and the genitive Spriggs are found chiefly in the neighbourhood of co. Norfolk, where Spriggins and Spurgeon, &c., arose.

Spurgeon, Spurgin. — Bapt. 'the son of Sprigin.' There can be little doubt about this. It is evidently an old and long-forgotten Scandinavian personal name. Norfolk is the home. It occurs there so early as 1273. The spelling of the surname is imitative, a copy of surgeon. For further instances and proof, v. Spriggin.

Squiller, Skiller. — Occup. 'the squiller.' A washer of dishes, &c. 'Squyllare, dysche-wescheare, lix': Prompt. Parv.

John le Squyllier. H. Geoffrey le Squeller. O.

Geoffrey le Squeler: Close Roll, 52 Hen. III.

John de la Squillerye. H.

The word seems closely related to the O.F. escuelle, a dish, but Professor Skeat (Etym. Dict., scullery) says the original form was swiller, from swill, to wash, passing from swiller to squiller, and as a habitat from squillery to scullery. 'The squyler of the kechyn' is mentioned by Robert of Brunne.

'The eleven messes to the children of the kechyn, squillery, and pastry, with porters, scowerers, and turn broches, &c.': Ord. Henry VIII at Eltham.

We may add 'Roger de Norhamptone, squyler,' in Mr. Riley's Memorials of London. The French escuelle, a dish, if not radically connected, must have influenced the changes that have passed over the word. Amongst other gifts from the City of London to the Black Prince, in 1371, were '48 esqueles and 24 salt-cellars, weighing by goldsmith's weight, 76lb. 5oz. 0dwt.' (Riley's Memorials of London, p. 359). 'Sergeant, squylloure' (Halliwell).

'Hugh Skeller, alias Dalton, was abbot of Furness, 13 Edw. III.: West's Ant. of Furness, p. 84.

Squire, Squires, Squier, Squiers. — Offic. 'the esquire,' an attendant upon a knight, a shield-bearer. Squires is the genitive form; cf. Brooks, Williams, Tompkins, &c.

Stallard, Stollard.—? Bapt. Probably 'the son of Stannard' or Stonard, a once popular font-name. The change from n to l is extremely common in English nomenclature; cf. banister for baluster, and v. Phillimore or Banister. There is no trace of a name Stallard or Stollard in the Hundred Rolls. The double variants, too, run side by side with the more correct ones; v. Stannard. Nevertheless cf. Icelandic personal name 'Stal-hardr,' hard as steel (v. Icel. Dict. stal, where the name and derivation are given).

Hugh Skot, de Staynwikes, 18 Edw. II: Freemen of York, i. 22.
MDB. (co. Cumb.), 2.

Staple, Staples, Stapler.—Local, 'at the staple,' a staple (O.F. estaple), a mart, a general centre of merchandise. Originally the place was the staple, not the commodity. Stapler is the occupative form, and Staples the genitive form; cf. Styles, Brooks, Holmes, &c.

Robert de Stapel, co. Kent, 1273. A.

The above entry no doubt refers to Staple-next-Wingham, a parish in co. Kent.

London, 4; MDB. (co. Sussex), 2.

Starbeck.—Local, 'of Starbeck,' a hamlet between Ripon and Knaresborough. Mr. Lower writes, partly quoting Mr. Ferguson, 'In O. Norse bokki means "vir grandis, corpore et animo." Hence Storbocki, from stór, great, "vir imperiosus." This may be true, but I take it that Starbeck is simply the local Starbeck. The surname still remains in the West Riding.

1772. Married — John Lambeld and Sarah Starbuck: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 223.
London, 2; West Riding Court Dir., 1; Sheffield, 1; New York, 2.

Starcher.—Occup. 'the starcher,' i.e. a cloth stiffener, a starcher of linen; from stark, strong, stiff, weakened to starch. The occupation is referred to in Cocke Lorraine's Bote:

'Butlers, starchers, and mustard-makers,
Hardware men, mole seekers, and ratte-takers.'

Ralph le Starkere, co. Hunts, 1273. A.

Starkbone.—Nick. 'stiff,' or strong-boned.

Robertus Starkbane, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 224.

Johannes Starkbayn, 1379: ibid.

Starkey, Starkie.—Nick. 'the stark,' i.e. the strong, the stiff; cf. Strong, &c. (v. Stark). Starkey seems undoubtedly to be a dialectic variant of Stark (cf. Teddy or Teddie for Edward): 'Starky, stiff, dry. Westmoreland' (Halliwell).
1579. Francis Starkey, co. Derby: Reg. Univ. Ox. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 87.

Starling.—(1) Nick. 'the starling'; formed from stare, a bird, with dim. ling.

'The false lapwing, full of trecherie,
The stare, that the counsaile can bewrie.'
Chaucer, Assembly of Fowls.

(2) Nick. 'the starling,' i.e. sterling, true, from starling, a coin of true weight.

'So that ye offre nobles or starlings.'
Chaucer, C. T. 12841.

Statham.—Local, 'of Statham.'
I cannot find any place of this name.
Possibly it stands for a parish styled Statherne, in co. Leicester. But this is pure conjecture on my part.

Stead, Steade.—Local, 'at the stead,' a place, a station, a settlement; cf. homestead, market-stead (= market-place). A great Yorkshire surname. The Market-place, Manchester, was the Market-stead till the close of the last century.
The Market-stead, Ulverston, is commonly so set down in the parish registers till 1790.

Steadman.

Steel, Steele, Stell, Stelle.— Bapt. 'the son of Steel' (!). The old Danish Staal (v. Yonge, ii. 293); Icel. Stál. Lower says, 'A northern pronunciation of stille.' This is quite inadmissible. All early instances are without prefix.
Besides, as 'atte style' became Styles, so 'atte steel' would have become Steels. It will be noticeable that all my examples are from the East Coast. The Scandinavian origin is manifest. Iron and steel are components of many of these early northern personal names;

Steen, Steenson; v. Stenson.

Steeple.—Local, 'of Steeple,' parishes in cos. Dorset and Essex.
Of course the origin may be derived from residence beside any steeple attached to a church in the country, especially in such cases where the steeple was actually detached from the body of the church.

Stephen, Stephens, Stephenson, Stephan.—Bapt. 'the son of Stephen.' There is no instance of Stephen in Domesday Book. But like John and Peter, it gained popularity with great rapidity; and Stephen of Blois, of course, exercised an influence in its favour. It was enormously popular in the hereditary surname period, and, as a consequence, has endless representatives of nick. and pet forms in the directories of to-day (v. Steven, Stevens, Stevenson, Stimpson, &c.).

Step toe, Stepto, Steptow.—Local. I cannot find the spot. The suffix is probably -how (v. How), as we find it in Shafto or Shillito, &c. Mr. Lower says, 'Probably refers to gait.' This may be so, but the local derivation must be looked for first.

Sticker.—Occup. 'the sticker,' probably a pig-sticker. Wiltshire and the adjacent district are still famous for their bacon.

John le Stikkere, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 190.

1686. Buried—Lucilla Sticher: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 269.

The preceding entry is quoted, but it is doubtful whether or no it concerns Sticker.

New York, 1; Philadelphia, 4.

Stickley.—Local, 'at the Stickley,' from residence thereby; probably some meadow of a sticky soil.

William atte Sticlegh, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 113.

Simon Stickle, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid. p. 194.

1606. Married—John Stickley and Rose Powell: St. Mary Aldermay, p. 11.

Stiffbow.—Nick. The opposite of Benbow, q.v.

John Stiffbowe: Patent Roll, 3 Edw. VI. pt. v.

Stiggins.—Bapt. 'the son of Stigand,' the name of the archbishop who crowned Harold; more recently immortalized by Charles Dickens in 'Pickwick.'

Bartholomew Stegin, co. Camb., 1273. A.

Gervase fil. Stigandi, Pipe Rolls, 6 Hen. II.

1706. Married—John Carrier and Anne Stigans: St. Peter, Cornhill, ii. 66.

1747. — John Harris and Mary Stiggins: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 38.

Boston (U.S.), 1.

Stileman.—Local; v. Styleman.

Stile(s).—Local; v. Style.

Still.—Nick. 'the still,' the quiet; cf. the opposite Snell or Quick, the active. While this seems perfectly satisfactory, v. Style and Styleman for another parentage. But Mr. Lower says that Stille was a tenant prior to Domesday. Therefore the name may be personal.

Walter Stille, co. Ox., 1273. A.

Robert Stille, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 106.

London, 13, 5; Philadelphia, 24, 12.

Stockham, Stockum.—Local, 'of Stockham,' a township in the parish of Runcorn, co. Ches. Stockum is an American variant; cf. Barnum for Barnham. As I have said of Stockwell, probably other small spots were called Stockham; v. Stock and Ham.

William de Stockham, co. Somerset, 1273. A.

Crockford, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 6, 3.

Stocking, Stocken, Stockin.

—Local, 'at the stocking,' i.e. the little stock, a dim. of Stock, q.v. Curiously enough, the article of dress so called is a dim. of the same word (v. stocking, Skeat's Dict.).

Edmund del Stocking, co. Bucks, 1273. A.

1759. Married — John Stocking (co. Norf.) and Eliz. Wright : St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 88.

London, 1, 6, 0; MDB. (co. Camb.), 1, 0, 0; Boston (U.S.), 1, 0, 3.

Stockley, Stokley, Stokely. —Local, 'of Stockley.' Two parishes in co. Devon, and a township in the parish of Brancepeth, in co. Durham, bear this name. Other smaller spots would probably bear it; v. Stock and Ley.

Ralph de Stockleye, co. Suffolk, 1273. A. Pagan de Stockleye, co. Oxf., ibid.

1791. Married — Phillip Stone and Temperance Stockley : St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 63.

1587. Buried —Eliz., wife of William Stockwell : St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iv. 36.

West Rid. Court Dir., 3; London, 3; Philadelphia, 7.

Stodart, Stoddard, Stoddart, Stodard. —Occur. (1) 'the studherd'; v. Studdard.

'A false stodmere,' i.e. studmare : York Mystery Plays, p. 193, l. 13.

(2) Possibly the same as Stot-herd, q.v. With the sharpened forms Stodart and Stoddart, cf. Calvert for Calveherd.

1765. Married —George Stoddard and Esther Tallents : St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 140.

1789. — Swinton Stodart and Jane Whinham : ibid. ii. 16.

1803. — John Jenkins and Mary Stoddard : ibid. p. 287.

London, 2, 1, 7, 0; West Rid. Court Dir., 0, 0, 2, 0; New York, 1, 18, 10, 1.

Stogdon, Stogden. —Local, 'of Stockton' (?). Probably a variant of Stockton, q.v.; cf. Slagg and Slack, &c.

1753. Married — John Stogdon and Mary Britton : St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 239.

Crockford, 2, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 1.

Stoke, Stokes. —Local, 'of Stoke.' There are sixty-six parishes in Crockford either simply Stoke or compounded, as in such cases as Stoke Bishop, Stoke Canon, Stoke Ash, Stoke Courcy. It is to be noticed that all the entries of Stoke (with one exception) are prefixed with de, those of Stock with de la or atte; 'de Stoke' implies a town or village, 'de la Stock' or 'atte Stock,' some single stump of a tree, &c., where the nominee dwelt. Etymologically, Stoke is a much older form than Stock. Monosyllabic local surnames commonly add the genitive s, as in Williams, Jones, &c.; cf. Holmes, Brooks, Styles. Hence Stoke is now almost unknown.

Stokely, Stokley; v. Stockley. The variants are American. Philadelphia, 3, 14.

Stoker. —Occur.; v. Stocker.

Stollard; v. Stallard.

Stonard; v. Stannard.

Stone, Stones. —Local, 'at the stone' or stones (cf. Styles, Stubbs, Stocks, &c.), from residence beside some remarkable roadside stone or rock.

1609. Bapt. —John, s. Francis Stone : St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 57.

London, 119, 3; West Rid. Court Dir., 4, 9; Philadelphia, 91, 2.

Stoneham. —Local, 'of Stoneham.' North and South Stoneham are parishes in co. Hants, near Southampton. Smaller localities bearing the name doubtless exist, and have furnished representatives.

William de Stonham, co. Camb., 1273. A.

Stephen de Stonham, co. Linc., ibid. 1603. John Stoneham : Reg. Univ. Oxf. i. 356.

1790. Married — Thomas Stoneham and Rebecca Markwick : St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 42.

London, 6; Philadelphia, 1.

Stonehewer, Stonier. —Occur. 'the stone-hewer,' a stonemason or quarryman. Similarly we find Woodhewer, Fleshhewer (q.v.), Blockhewer, and Blocker; cf. 'hewers of wood' (Authorized Version). My first instance is no doubt a misreading :

Thomas Stonhewaa, co. Oxf., 1273. A. Richard Stonhewer. SS.

1605. John Stonhewer or Stonier, of Barleyford, co. Ches. : Wills at Chester, i. 184.

1638. George Stonier, of Odd Rode : ibid. ii. 209.

1702. Married — Charles Edward Pigon and Charlotte Rycroft; witness, Richard Stonehewer : St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 81.

Manchester, o, 6; MDB. (co. Ches.), 1, o; (co. Essex), 1, o.

Stonehill, Stonhill.—Local, 'at the stone-hall' (?), from residence therein. The evidence is, so far as I can discover, in favour of this derivation, viz. the hall or mansion built of stone, not the stony hill, which is a modern and natural corruption.

Michael de Stonehale, co. Salop, 1273. A. William de la Stonhall, co. Camb., ibid.

I cannot hesitate to say that this is the origin of the name; cf. these two entries:

1693. Buried—Richard Stonehall: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 273.

1694. — Mary Stonell: ibid. p. 274.

The following are manifest corruptions:

1703. Married—Richard Stonell and Eliz. Spakeman: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 226.

1750. — Richard Sills and Mary Stonnill: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 43.

1797. — Nathaniel Stonhill and Catherine Anderton: ibid. ii. 171.

London, o, 1; Oxford, 1, o; Philadelphia, 2, o.

Stonehouse, Stonhouse.—Local (1), 'at the stone-house' (v. Stannus), from residence therein; cf. Woodhouse, Moorhouse, Parkhouse, &c. Many dwellings would be so termed.

John del Stonhuse, C. R., 47 Hen. III.

(2) Local, 'of Stonehouse,' a parish in co. Gloucester.

John de Stonhus, co. Glouc., 1273. A.

1581. Walter Stonehouse or Stonhouse, co. Middlesex: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 111.

1618. Bapt.—Thomas, s. Cristofer Stonhouse: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 97.

1773. Married—William Stonehouse and Rebecca Kerby: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 228. London, 2, o; Crockford, 1, 1; Boston (U.S.), 3, o.

Stoneman.—Local, 'the stone-man,' the man who dwelt at the stone; v. Stone; cf. Bridgman, Stockman, Steadman, Styleman, &c.

1572. — Stoneman: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 31.

1751. Married—John Stoneman and Hannah Clifford: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 204.

1753. — Richard Stoneman and Mary Chipperfield: ibid. p. 236.

London, 4; Philadelphia, 2.

Stoner.—Local or occup.; v. Stanier.

Stonestreet.—Local, 'at the stone street,' i.e. the paved road, from residence therein. Mr. Lower suggests that as this name sprang up in the neighbourhood of Sussex, it may represent the old Roman road from Chichester to London, anciently called Stanistreet (Patr. Brit. p. 331).

Stonhill; v. Stonehill.

Stonier; v. Stonehewer.

Stonor.—Local, 'of Stonor,' an estate in co. Oxford, thus described by Leland: 'Stonor is three miles out of Henley. Ther is a fayre parke and a warren of Connes and fayre woods. . . . Sir Walter Stonor, now possessor of it, hathe augmented and strenghtened the howse. The Stonors hath longe had it in possession' (v. Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 331).

Stoodley; v. Studley.

Stopford, Stopforth.—Local, 'of Stockport.' The old name for Stockport, an important town and parish in co. Cheshire, near Manchester.

Thomas Stopforth, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 43.

Roger de Stokeport, 17 Edw. I: East Cheshire, ii. 338.

1549. Oliver Stokport, mayor of Stockport: ibid. p. 347.

1574. Married—Robert Stopforthe and Ellen Osbalston: Prestbury Ch., co. Ches., p. 45.

1594. James Stopforth, of Latham: Wills at Chester, i. 184.

1601. Married—Ralph Stockport and Margaret Collier: East Cheshire, ii. 405.

1616. William Stopford, of Melling: Wills at Chester, i. 184.

1674. William Stopford, of Macclesfield: East Cheshire, i. 457.

London, 2, o; MDB. (co. Lanc.), 2, 2.

Stoppard.—Local, 'of Stockport,' a corruption of Stopford, an old name for Stockport; v. Stopford. There need be no hesitation in accepting this derivation.

1625. Married—Edward Mottershed and Joane Stoppard: Prestbury Ch., East Ches., p. 251.

1635. — John Delves and Margaret Stoppard: ibid. p. 297.

1659. 'Mr. Stoppard, a minister in Lancashyre': East Cheshire, i. 228.

Of this solution there cannot be the shadow of a doubt. From Stopford the popular pronunciation became Stoppard.

Manchester, 1.

Stops, Stopps, Stopp.—Local, 'at the stopps' (?), i.e. stoup or gatepost: the usual term in Ulverston, or Furness generally, for any tall stone post. Probably, however, the instance below is an early variant of Stobb or Stubb (v. Stubbs); cf. Hopps for Hobbs.

William del Stopp, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 177.

1759. Married—John Paine and Mary Stopps: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 87.

London, 1, o, o; West Riding Court Dir., o, 1, o; New York, o, o, 2.

Storer.—Occup. and offic. 'the storer,' one who stored goods, probably an officer in the feudal household; v. Storey. But more probably a wool-storer, a warehousman. The name is frequently met with in the Yorks. Poll Tax, 1379.

Johannes Storour, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 256.

Hugo Storour, 1379: ibid. p. 257.

Thomas Storour, 1379: ibid. p. 21.

1771. Married—Joseph Storer and Mary Kightley: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 216.

London, 8; West Rid. Court Dir., 1; Sheffield, 2; Philadelphia, 7.

Storey, Story, Storry, Storie, Storrie, Storrey.—Personal, 'the son of Storr' (q.v.), popularly Story.

Thomas Storre, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 109.

Johannes Storre, 1379: ibid. p. 43.

Roger Storre, 1379: ibid.

Storey is still among the most familiar of Yorkshire names, but it has become, of necessity, mixed with Storer, which also is well established in that county.

Stotherd, Stodart, Stoddart, Stoddard, Stodart, Stothard,

Stothert.—Occup. 'the stot-herd,' one who tended stots, i.e. bullocks, the bullock-herd; v. Stott. All these forms are North English, and must be distinguished from Studdard and Stuttard (q.v.), with their other corruptions, although no doubt all are now inextricably mixed; cf. Calvert, Coward, Oxnard, Shepard, &c.

Streat; v. Street.

Streater; v. Streeter.

Streatfeild.—Local, 'of Streatfeild.' Mr. Lower says, 'There may be several places of this name. I only know of one, which is a "borough" of the manor of Robertsbridge, in East Sussex, called in a document before me, of temp. Eliz., Stretfelde; and this locality is within a few miles of that which has been, for three centuries and a half, the chief habitat of the name' (Patr. Brit. p. 332). Streetend, Streeten(?), Street-on(?).—Local, 'at the street end'; cf. Woodend and Townsend. Although Streeten and Streeton would seem to be variants of Stretton, q.v., it seems likely that they are but popular variants of Streetend. This was a common mediaeval surname, and yet it has no modern representatives, unless my view be accepted.

Stretch.—? Local. I cannot suggest any satisfactory origin of this surname, except the foreign Stretz. The Philadelphia Directory has three Stretzes and twenty-two Stretches. Nevertheless, seeing that Stretch was a familiar name in co. Ches. so early as the 16th century, it is almost certain that it is of English local origin.

Stretton.—Local, 'of Stretton,' parishes and places in cos. Chester, Derby, Rutland, Stafford, Warwick, Salop, Hereford, and Leicester. It is quite possible that Streeten and Stretton are variants. But v. Streetend. Of course the derivation lies between one or the other.

Strode, Strude.—Local, (1) 'of Stroud,' a parish in co. Glouc.; (2) 'of Strood,' a parish in co. Kent (v. Stroud). Both seem to have been anciently styled Strode. Mr. Lower, quoting Shirley's Noble and Gentle Men, says that 'the name is derived from Strode, in the parish of Ermington, co. Devon, which was in the possession of Adam de Strode in the reign of Henry III' (Patr. Brit. p. 333). However true this may be, it is obvious that the towns of Stroud and Strood have also their representatives in our directories in the form of Strode.

Strother.—Local, 'of the strother,' i.e. marsh, from residence there beside. 'Strother, a marsh. North Engl.' (Halliwell). This surname has its home in Northumberland. In Newcastle and the district it is commonly met with. It is interesting to note that Chaucer places his Strother in the far North, where Allen, too, was the favourite name. v. Langstroth.

Strutt.—? Nick. 'one who strutted' (?). Sobriquets from gait or peculiarities of walking are endless. The reason is obvious; they gave individuality, readily seized upon when it became manifest that surnames were necessary to eke out identity.

Studdard, Stuttard, Stud-dert, Stutard.—Occup. 'the stud-herd,' one who kept a stud of horses; v. Stodart, and cf. Stotherd. One of a large class of North-English surnames with suffix -herd, as in Shepherd; cf. Calvert, Coward, Geldard, or Oxnard. The variant Stutard is, of course, a mere sharpening of the more correct form, as in the case of Calvert for Calve-herd. Studdard evidently represented the old stud-herd, a breeder of horses or mares (v. Skeat on stud).

Sturt.—Local, 'of Stert,' a parish in co. Wilts, near Devizes. As suggested by Mr. Lower, this seems the probable origin. The evidence I furnish below confirms this view:

Sturtevant, Sturtivant, Sturdevant, Sturdivant.—

Nick. At first sight this sobriquet would seem to be a compound of sturdy, rash, inconsiderate; and avaunt, a boast, a vaunt, and also an old French sobriquet for some reckless boaster. But I have no doubt it is one of the early nicknames given to pursuivants, harbingers, or heralds, of which this dictionary has so many instances. Thus it means 'go-before,' from start (M.E. stirt and stert), and avaunt, forward, to the front. We are still familiar with the avant-courier. An exact parallel will be found in the case of Prickadvantage (spur-forward); v. Pickavance, Purchas, Golightly, Lightfoot, &c. Wilhelmus Styrtauant, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 273.

Style, Styles, Stiles, ?Stile.—Local, 'at the stile,' from residence thereby. The seeming plural form Stiles or Styles is really the genitive; cf. Williams for William (= William's son). So Styles = Style's son; cf. Holmes, Briggs, Brooks. The genitive form in local surnames is almost entirely confined to monosyllabic surnames.

Such, Suche, Sutch.—Local, an old form of 'de la Zouch.' I cannot give any satisfactory derivation of this local term. Lower says, 'The baronial family who gave the suffix to Ashby-de-la-Zouch, co. Leic., were a branch of the Earls of Brittany. . . . The founder of the race in England was William le Zusche, who died in the first year of King John. In a charter he calls Roger la Zusche his father, and Alan, Earl of Brittany, his grandfather.' . . . Lower adds that Camden asserts that 'Zouch signifieth the stocke of a tree in the French tongue.' If this be true, Zouch and its variants, such as Souch, Such, Sutch, are but equivalent to the English Stubbs, Stock, Stubbings, &c.

Suckbitch.—Local, 'of Soghespich.' Mr. Lower writes: 'This name, borne by more than one respectable family in the West of England, might be supposed to be derived from some legend analogous to that of Romulus and Remus. The earliest form of it, Sokespic, however, excludes such an origin. See Notes and Queries, 1st S. v. 425.' The name is local, and has been turned into an imitative form.

Close beside this entry is the mention of a place Spichwick, no doubt closely connected.

Suckling.—Nick. 'the suckling.' This, at least, seems to be the origin. Mr. Lower thinks it is a local surname, but furnishes no evidence; cf. Child, Ayre, Eyre.

Sucksmith.—Occup.; v. Shoemsmith. I may, however, suggest that Sucksmith and Sixsmith may be corruptions of scythe-smith or sickle-smith, one who manufactured scythes. In Tobacco Tortured (London: Richard Field, 1616) several characters appear whose names are 'Cocke-on-hoope the Cobbler,' 'Martin the Mariner,' 'Thin-gut the Thatcher,' and 'Simkin the Sithe-smith' (v. Summer, Summers, Somers, Sommers, Sommer.—Bapt. 'the son of Summer.' Just as ecclesiastical seasons gave us such personal names as Noel, Pentecost, Pask, Christmas, &c., so several centuries earlier popular names for children were descriptive of the natural season in which the child was born, or even the state of the weather. Hence such personal names as Snow, Storm, Winter, Summer, Spring, &c. Several years ago a child was baptized Sou'-wester because born on shipboard in a south-westerly gale. This case I can vouch for.

M.E. somer, summer. Cf. such local names as Somyerby, Somercoates, Somerford, Somersby, Somersham, Somerton, all implying that the first settler bore the name of Somer (now Summer); v. Winter for further information. Summers, Somers, &c., are the genitive form; cf. Williams and William.

Sumption, Sumpton.—?—
Mr. Lower writes, 'This very remarkable name (Sumption) appears to be a contraction of "Assumption" (i.e. of the Virgin Mary), the church festival, and to be cognate with Pentecost, Christmas, Easter, &c.' (Patr. Brit. p. 334). This is quite possible, as nearly all the church festivals are recorded in our directories; but it is more probable, for want of evidence, that both Sumption and Sumpton are variants of Somerton, the p being intrusive, as in Thompson or Simpson.

Sunnett.—Bapt.; v. Sennett.

Sunter.—Occup.; v. Sumpter. This corruption still occurs in the district where it has existed at least three centuries. Several entries concerning the family of Sumpter are thus found in the Prestbury registers, East Cheshire:

1560. Buried—Jees Sunter. xxx. Sept., p. 3.

— Richard Sunter. xviii. Nov., ibid.

I have accidentally omitted to name the register.

Manchester, 3; Boston (U.S.), 1.

Suthery, Suthery. — Local,

'of Southery,' a parish in co. Norfolk.

William de Souther', co. Camb., 1273. A.

Robert de Sutherey, co. Wilts, ibid.

MDb. (co. Bucks), 4, 3; Philadelphia, 1, 0.

Sutliff; v. Sutcliff.

Sutterle, Sutterley, Suttley.

—Local, possibly sometimes a variant 'of Southery' (v. Suthery), of which the following seems to be an intermediate form:

Roger de Soterle, co. Suff., 20 Edw. I. R.

This closely resembles the American form Sutterle; but more probably Sutterley is a distinct name from Suthery, the one being the Southerley, the other the Souther-hey (v. Lee and Hey).

London (Suttley), 1; Philadelphia, 3, 3, 0.

Suttle, Suttill. — (1) Local,

'of Soothill,' a township in the parish of Dewsbury, W. Rid. Yorks, in the neighbourhood of which the surname is chiefly found.

Swainston, Swanston. — Bapt. 'the son of Swain.' A corruption of Swainston and Swanson; cf. Johnston and Johnstone, strongly represented in the London Directory, and not always local. Also cf. Snelston and Snelson.

1754. Married—Thomas Swanston and Anne Butler: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 274.

1787. — John Brown and Eliz. Swanston: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 408.

London, 3, 2.

Swale, Swales. — Local: (1) 'of Swallow Hill,' a hamlet near Barnsley, co. Yorks. At least there is evidence in favour of this view. (2) 'At the Swale,' from residence beside the river of that name, whence Swaledale. Doubtless this will be deemed the more satisfactory solution. Swales is the genitive form; cf. Williams, Jones, Brooks, Styles, &c. The first reference is in Darton, the parish in which Swallow Hill lies.

Isabella de Swahill, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 88.

Sweeter, Sweitzer, Sweetzer, Sweetsir, Switzer.—? Local. Lower suggests 'Switzer,' a Swiss, a native of Switzerland. The surname is no doubt foreign, but was early settled in England, and has acquired an English appearance. At the time of writing there is being advertised 'Schweitzer's Coccatina.' Cotgrave quotes:

'A Switzer's bellie and a drunkard's face
Are no true signes of penitentiall grace.'
'Leading three thousand must'red men in pay,
Of French, Scots, Alman, Swisser, and the Dutch.'

Sykes, Sikes.—Local, 'at the syke,' from residence beside a sike, i. e. a stream. One of the greatest of Yorkshire surnames. It has ramified in a marvellous manner. 'Sike, a gutter, a stream. North England' (Halliwell). Sykes is almost the invariable dress; cf. Dykes for Dikes. The suffix -s is the genitive form, as in Jones, Brooks, Holmes, Williams, &c., meaning Sykes' son. Sometimes it may mean residence beside two streams, as in one of my references below; then Sykes is plural. Cf. Beck, Brook, Brooks, Gott, &c.

The vexed question of the origin of this name is absolutely settled by my last references. It is a personal name. It was not local, for it is never found in conjunction with 'de.' Many surnames may be seen in Domesday, and Talebot would simply be Richard's patronymic. This explains to a certain extent the early use of Talbot as a dog's name, personal names being freely used in this manner. Gilbert as Gib became the recognized name for a cat, Cuddy (Cuthbert) for a donkey.

Tantum.—Local, 'of Taunton'; v. Tanton. This corruption is a very natural one; cf. Ransom for Ranson, or Sanson for Sanson. Also cf. the dictionary word random for randon.

1753. Married—William Tantom and Mary Ward: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 265.

Philadelphia, 1.

Tapiser, Tapner, Tapster (?).

—Occup. 'the tapecer' or tapener, a worker of tapestry for decorating walls, &c. 'Tappet, a clothe, tappis': Palsgrave. 'Tapecer, tapetarius': Prompt. Parv. The Ordinances for the Guild of St. Katharine, Lynn, are signed by 'Peter Tapeper' (English Gilds, p. 68, E. E. Text Soc.). Simon Tapser (H.). The Couchers and Tapisers went together in the York Corpus Christi Pageant (York Mystery Plays, p. xxiii, Toulmin Smith). Spelt also Tapiters. In the old usages of Winchester, the trade is called Tapener (English Gilds, Toulmin Smith, p. 350). As Tapner it is in the London Directory.

1783. Married — Thomas Hall and Eliz. Tapner: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 354. Marmadock Myddylton, tapitour: Freeman of York, i. 265 (Surt. Soc.). Robertus Vessy, tapitour: ibid. London, 0, 1, 1.

Taplay, Tapley.—Local, (1) 'of Tapley,' some small place in co. Devon which I have not succeeded in finding; (2) 'of Taplow,' a parish in co. Bucks, one mile from Maidenhead, a natural modification of the name.

Adam de Tapplegh, co. Devon, Hen. III.—Edw. I. K. Robert de Tapplegh, co. Devon, ibid. 'Robertus and Adam de Tapplegh, tenent in Tapplegh unum feodum,' etc.: K. p. 175.

1744-5. Married—Thomas Tapley and Mary Keet: Canterbury Cath. p. 87. London, 2, 1; Boston (U.S.), 0, 7.

Taplin, Tapling.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' from nick. Tam, and dim. Tamlin, which became Tamplin (q.v.), corrupted to Taplin. Thus the p is intrusive as in Tompson, and the g excrement as in Robling or Hewlings; cf. Tapson for Tampson.

1754. Married — William Powell and Mary Taplin: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 276.

1801. — Press Bell and Hannah Taplin: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 244. London, 9, 2; Boston (U.S.), 3, 0.

Tapner.—Occur. ; v. Tapiser. Toluredus le Tapner. C.

It is almost a certainty that this is a misprint for Tapiner (v. York Plays, p. lxxvii). London, 1.

Tappenden.—Local, 'of Tappenden,' an ancient Kentish family, long resident at Sittingbourne, but originally of Tappenden, otherwise Toppenden, in the parish of Smarden (v. Hasted's Kent, vii. 479), quoted by Lower.

1748. Married—John Clare and Mary Tappenden, of Feversham, co. Kent: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 69.

1799. — James Scartchin and Mary Tappenden: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 210. MDB. (co. Kent), 1; London, 3.

Tapper.—Occur. 'the tapper,' one who tapped the barrel, i.e. the tapster; the feminine suffix gained ground, as females gradually monopolized the place.

'And every hosteler and gay tapstere.' Chaucer, C. T. 241.

'Tapper, an inn-keeper. North England' (Halliwell).

1750. Married — William Tapper and Phebe Davies: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 177. Crockford, 1; Philadelphia, 8.

Tappin, Tapping.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' a corruption of Tamplin, q.v.

1646. Bapt. — Thomas, s. Walter Tappin, vinthner: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 90.

1647. — John, sonn of Richard Tapping: ibid. p. 91.

1651. — Martha, d. William Tapping, vinthner: ibid. p. 93. London, 4, 4; New York, 9, 1.

Tapson.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' a corruption of Tampson (v. Tamplin and Tamblin), just as Taplin is a corruption of Tamplin (i.e. Tamlin, or Tomlin). London, 4; Devon Court Dir., 2.

Tapster.—Occur. 'the tapster'; v. Tapper. Cf. Tapiser.

1548. Bapt. — William Tapster: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 4.

1749. Married — Robert Tapster and Mary Adams: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 143. London, 1.

Tarback.—Local, 'of Tarback,' a township in the parish of Huyton, co. Lanc. (Torboe, Domesday). An early family of Tarbocks was settled here.

1786. Married — James Tarry and Sarah Killick: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 394.

London, 7, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 1.

Tasker.—Occur. 'the tasker,' one with some fixed work to do, possibly one paid by the job. 'Triturator, a tasker, Nominale MS., 15th century' (Halliwell). Hence a thresher or reaper in some places is called a tasker. I met the word in Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy (Introduction): 'Many poor country vicars, for want of other means, are driven to their shifts . . . as Paul did, at last turn taskers, maltsters, costermongers, graziers.'

1773. Married—Peter Tasker and Mary Bowers: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 229.
London, 10; West Rid. Court Dir., 6; Sheffield, 6; Philadelphia, 18.

Tasseler.—Occur. 'the tasseler,' one who scratched cloth, to make a nap, with teasels, a prickly plant known as the Fuller's Thistle.

'Cloth that cometh fro' the wevyng
Is nought comely to wear
Til it be fulled under foot,

And with taseles cracched.'

Piers Plowman.

'Item, that every fuller, from the said feast of St. Peter, in his craft and occupation of fuller, rowler, or tayseler of cloth, shall exercise and use taysels, and no cards, deceitfully impairing the same cloth' (4 Edw. IV, c. 1).—'en sa arte et ocupacion de fuller et scalpier ou tezeiler de drap, exercise et use teizels, &c.' 'Tasyl, carduus, cardo fullonis': Prompt. Parv. 'Tazills, 5s. 8d. more in tazills, 2s.' (Richmondshire Wills, Surt. Soc. p. 274. Inventory of property of Edward Kyrkelands, of Kendall, 1578).

Gilbert le Tasselere. H.
Matilda la Tasselere. H.
Edward Tayler. W. 9.

This last name occurs (1568) in the will of Walter Strykland (Richmondshire Wills, p. 224). It is manifestly connected with tasill, instanced above. Thus Taylor in the Kendal district may have absorbed Taziller.

1610. Edward Tesler, or Teasler: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. i. 402.

Tatchell.—Bapt. 'the son of Tachel,' one of the numerous personal names ending in -el. The surname is still found in co. Somerset.

Taylor, Tayler, Tailer, Tailor.—Occup. 'the taylor', a cutter-out of cloth, a maker of clothes. M.E.

taylor, taylor; O.F. tailleur, a cutter. It is now understood that taylor shall be the trade-name, and Taylor and Tayler the surname. The early rolls are full of instances, and as a result Taylor is the fourth commonest patronymic in England, giving precedence only to Smith, Jones, and Williams. The Hundred Rolls (1273) have the following variations: Taillar, Tailour, Taillur, Tailur, Taliur, Tallur, Tallyur, Talar, Talyur, Tayler, Tayllour, Taylur, Taylour, and Taylor.

Tebb, Tebbs, Tibbs.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Theobald', from the nick. Tebb or Tibb. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Isabella', from the nick. Tib; cf. the Yorkshire Till for Matilda and Tagg for Agnes. This solution is important as helping to the origination of Tib, the once familiar name for a female cat, Gib (Gilbert) standing for the male; v. Gibb. Tibby is still the pet-name of Isabella in the North of England; and a tib-cat still means a female cat in Yorkshire, where Isabella was once so popular as a girl's name. But while all this is true, there can be no doubt that Tib, for a cat's name, was originally masculine and ran side by side with Gib, without particular reference to sex. In Reynard the Fox, Tibald is pussy's name (cf. Tibert, a cat: Halliwell); and the nick, of Tibald (i.e. Theobald) was in England Tib. This is clear from Gower's lines on Tyler's insurrection:

*'Huddle ferit, quem Judd terit, dum Tybbe juvatur,
Jacke domosque viros vellit, en ense necat,'*

where only masculine names are introduced. Originally, then, Tib for a cat was the nick, of Theobald. By degrees, however, Tib for Isabella ousted the popularity of Tib for Theobald. Besides, Theobald itself was becoming forgotten as a font-name. Hence the idea slowly crept in that Tib stood for the female cat, and had always done so. Of course the convenience of having a female name to correspond with Gib was obvious. In the Elizabethan and Stuart period Isabella was universally Tib (Tib for Theobald having disappeared), and Tib was still the lady cat. In Gammer Gurton's Needle Hodge says:

*'And while her staff she took
At Tyb her cat to fling.'*

Burton in his Anatomy of Melancholy, in a list of names, includes 'tall Tib, slender Sib'; while the 'Psalm of Mercie,' a Commonwealth squib, says:

"So, so," quoth my sister Bab;
And "kill 'um," quoth Margerie:
"Spare none," cries old Tib; "no quarter," says Sib,
"And hey for our monarchy!"

No doubt there is an occult connexion between Tib and tabby.

Tebbitt, Tebbboth, Tebbott, Tebbutt, Tebbutt, Tebbets, Tebbetts.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Theobald.' These are not diminutives formed from the nick, Tebb, q.v., though practically they became so. They are corrupted forms of the shorter Tebald. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Isabella,' nick. Tib, dim. Tibot; v. Tebb. Tibet Talkapace is one of the heroines in Udall's Ralph Roister Doister (circa 1550). 'Work, Tibet; work, Annot; work, Margery; Sew, Tibet; knit, Annot; spin, Margery; Let us see who will win the victory.'

The surnames descended from the above two names are now inextricably mixed.

Teleress.—Occup.; v. Teller.

Ida le Teleresse. T.

Telfer, Telford, Telfour.—Bapt. 'the son of Taillefer,' i.e. cut-iron. This surname seems to have originally flourished in the Lowlands, and to have worked its way across the border into Northumberland. The corruption into Telford must not lead us astray, although it looks distinctly local.

'Thomas Telford, the great engineer, used to say, "When I was ignorant of Latin, I did not suspect that Telfor, my true name, might be translated, "I bear arms" (tela fero), and, thinking it unmeaning, adopted Telford" (Lower). In the neighbourhood of Newcastle the two forms are common, and in recent generations either form was used by people of the same stock. John Taylfar, in 1558, obtained a grant from the Bishop of Durham of the reversion of the office of seneschal in the cities and boroughs of Gateshead, Durham, &c., expectant on the death of Christopher Browne (PPP, ii. 334). This is the earliest instance I can find in the district.

On Nov. 1, 1696, twenty-eight people were drowned at Canoubie, after attending church. Reference is made to one in an inscription in the churchyard:

'Here lyes George Tealer, who died in the water, Nov. the 1, 1696, being the Lord's day, as they were going home from the Kirk': Trans. Cumb. and Westm. Ant. and Arch. Soc., vol. viii. p. 287.

The famous Taillefer of the battle of Hastings will be familiar to the reader. Lower says that Tailzefer was the Scotch form in the 16th century. Cf. Gulliver and Gulliford.

Telwright, Tellwright, Tilewright.—Occup. 'the tilewright,' a maker of tiles; later, and more generally, a potter, one who bakes and moulds clay. Tilewright seems to be the true form, tygel-wyrhia (Matt. xxvii. 7) occurring in an Anglo-Saxon Gospel (v. Skeat, s.v. tile). In the York Mystery Plays (Toulmin Smith: Clarendon Press) they are styled Tielmakers or Tilletheekers (i.e. tile-thatchers). In a statute of 1563 they are Tile-makers (5 Eliz. c. 4-23). In the Potteries the term tilewright is still used, and it is there the surname Tellwright or Telwright has existed for centuries.

Tempest.—? I dare not hazard a conjecture as to the class to which this surname belongs. Mr. Lower says, 'This family, who are doubtless of Norman origin, are traced to Roger Tempest (temp. Henry I), who held three carucates and two oxgangs of land in the Shipton Fee, co. York' (Patr. Brit. p. 340).

Also note that the surname Toket is referred to as Doket in Index of Visitation of Yorkshire (Harl. Soc.). Yorkshire and the Lincolnshire border strongly affected Denis in the surname period. We also find Dandridge for Tandridge, and Tandy for Dandy. Dogood in the old registers is manifestly Toogood.

Thayer.—? Bapt. 'the son of Theodoric' (?), from the O.F.

popular nick. Thierry or Thierre (v. Terry). Thayer is, I presume, a modern English modification of the surname. But while it barely exists in England, it is a familiar entry in American directories.

I have no actual proof for my conjecture, but I strongly believe

I shall be found correct.

Thickness, Thicknesse.—Local, 'of Thickness,' some headland on the English coast that I have not been able to identify; cf. Holderness, Furness, &c. The suffix is -ness, a nose of land. Mr. Lower cruelly writes, 'Thicknesse, nese or nesse, is O.E. for nose, and this surname therefore probably refers to the thick nose of the original bearer' (Patr. Brit. p. 341).

Thirston.—A variant of Thurston (v. Thurstan).

Boston (U.S.), 1.

Thirtle.—Bapt. 'the son of Thurkettle,' q.v., a curious variant. I have not found any 19th century instances. v. Thirtle.

1675. Bapt.—William, s. Thomas Thirtle: St. Mary Aldermay (London), p. 103.

1677. —Eliz., d. Thomas Thirtle: ibid. p. 104.

Thirtle.—Bapt. 'the son of Thurkettle,' a variant of Thirkell or Thurkle (v. Thurkettle); cf. Thurtle. This corruption was seemingly an early one, for a township in the parish of Swine, E. Rid. Yorks, bears the name of Thirtleby, i.e. the dwelling of Thurkell, the first settler. No doubt it was originally Thurkellby. MDB. (Norfolk), 2.

Thistleton, Thistleton.—Local, 'of Thistleton,' a parish in Co. Rutland, eight miles from Oakham. Other places probably existed of this name. It is interesting to notice that my first entry is from a Lincolnshire document. The name still exists in that county.

Thomasin.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' from the dim. Thomasin.

A feminine Thomasina or Thomasine arose about the year 1350, and was popular as a font-name over the whole country till the 18th century. It is found in every register in every conceivable form, including Tamzen and Tomson. No doubt Thomasin, as a surname, has long been lost in Thomason or Thomson.

Thousandpound. — Nick. 'Thousand-pound'; cf. Hundredpound, Centlivre, Ninence, Twentymark, Twelvepence, Fourpence, &c. Thus in the present day a rich colonial is often nicknamed 'the Nugget.'

'Thomas Thousandpound' appears in the Wardrobe Accounts of Edward I. v. Index.

Thrasher; v. Thresher.

Threadgold, Thridgould, Tredgold.—?Nick. 'Threadgold,' a sobriquet of an embroiderer, or tapiser, or coucher. But far more probably a personal name, one of the many names ending in good, gawd, got, or gold; v. Scattergood, which is probably a personal and not a nickname.

Threlfall.—Local, 'of Threlfall,' an estate in the parish of Kirkham, co. Lancaster. This surname has ramified very strongly, and is extremely familiar in the Palatinate. The family was 'origiginally seated at Threlfall in the Fylde, of which were John and Henry Threlfall in the time of Edward VI, and Edmund Threlfall in 19 Jas. I, who died seised of lands in Threlfall, Goosnargh, and Hothersall': Baines' Lancashire, ii. 605.

Throop, Throup; v. Thorp.

Thrower.—Occup. 'the thrower,' a thread or silk winder, one who throws thread. It is almost certain that Thrower is a corrupted form of Throwing; cf. Thring and Tring (v. Thunder for a reverse corruption).

John Thrower, rector of Flordon, co. Norf., 1418: FF. v. 73.

Clemens Thrower, C. R., 28 Henry VII. pt. ii.

1774. Married—Thomas Thrower and Eliz. Philby: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 237. London, 4; MDB. (Norfolk), 7.

Thrupp; v. Thorp.

Thunder.—Occup. 'thetunder,' an American imitative corruption; cf. Thring with Tring and Thrower with Trower. Nevertheless, this same corruption is found in English registers; v. Tunder and Tunnelor.

1669. Bapt.—Honour, d. Pattnoe (sic) Thunder: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 239.

1800. Married—Valentine Riviere and Henrietta Thunder (co. Bucks): St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 230.

1801. —Gregory Staples and Mary Thunder: ibid. p. 248. Philadelphia, 3.

Thurburn; v. Thorburn.

Thurgaland.—Local, 'of Thurgoland,' a township in the parish of Silkstone, W. Rid. Yorks.

1620. John Hill and Eliz. Thurgaland: Marriage Lic. (Westminster), p. 27.

1621. Avery Thurgaland, co. Yorks: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 389. Philadelphia, 4.

Thurgall.—Bapt. 'the son of Thorkettle'; v. Thurkettle. This Norfolk surname is easily proved to be thus descended. It is only a variant of Thurkle; cf. Thurkley, a local surname (i.e. the by or dwelling of Thorkettle).

'In the priory church (Langley, co. Norf.) was buried Sir Robert Thurgelby': FF. x. 149.

'Sir Roger de Thurkelby had a grant of free warrant in the 29th of Hen. III': ibid. viii. 22.

In the same way Thurkle or Thurkell became Thurgall, and is so found to this day in co. Norfolk, where Thirkettle, or Thurkettle, or Thurkell are still familiar. It is simply a variant. In compounds the suffix -kettle almost invariably became -kell or -kle; v. Arkettle, Oskettle, Thurkettle, &c.

MDB. (Norfolk), 1.

Thurgar, Thurgur.—Bapt. 'the son of Turgar' or Thurgar (Yonge, ii. 206).

Thurgood, Thirgood, Thorogood, Thorouggood, Toogood, Towgood.

—Bapt. 'the son of Thurgod' (Turgod, Domesday; cf. Tur-ulf for Thur-ulf, and Tor-ald for Thor-ald).

'William Togod, alias Thogod' (L.). This is an important entry, proving, if proof were wanting, that our Toogoods and Towgoods are the same. That Thurgood should be euphemized to Thorouggood was as natural as inevitable.

Thurkettle, Thurkell, Thurkle, Thurkill, Thirkettle, Thirkell.—Bapt. 'the son of Thurkettle,' a compound of Kettle, q.v. Kettle as a suffix became -kell, -kill, or -kle. v. Thirticle, Thirtle, Thurtle, Thurtell, all variants.

Thurtle, Thurtell.—Bapt. 'the son of Thurkettle,' variants of Thurkle and Thurkell (v. Thurkettle); cf. Thirtle. These surnames are found in Norfolk and Suffolk, where, of course, we expect to see them, as Thurkettle has been established as a surname there for six centuries.

1802. Married—Samuel Thurtle and Susanna Lucas: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 256. MDB. (co. Norfolk), 1, 1; London, 1, 0.

Thwaite, Thwaites, Thwaits.—Local, 'of the thwaites' or thwaite, i.e. the meadows, the clearings or clearing, frequently found in such compounds as Thistlethwaite, Cooperthwaite, Thornthwaite, Haverthwaite, or Postlethwaite, which are all North English in origin. Probably connected with whittle, a knife. M.E. thwitel, a knife. Hence thwaite, a woodland clearing.

Thynne.—Nick. 'the thin,' i.e. lean, slender. M.E. thinne and thynne.

'My tale is don, for my wit is but thinne.' Chaucer, C. T. 9556.

Cf. Thick, Large, Small, Bigg, Little, Fatt, &c. The old orthography has been maintained in this name. For a strange but unconfirmed story of a local origin, viz. 'John of th' Inne,' one of the Inns of Court, v. Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 345. Until better proof is shown we may be content with the satisfactory derivation given above.

Tidd.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Tiddeman,' from the nick. Tidd; v. Tiddeman. But possibly a nick. of Tiffany, q.v., the old name for Epiphany (i.e. Theophania).

'Tid, Mid, and Miseray, Carlin, Pome, and Pace-egg Day,' is a North-English rhyme by which children still learn the chief Sundays from Epiphany to Easter. (2) Local, 'of Tydd,' parishes in cos. Cambridge and Lincoln. Probably these are the chief parents.

Tidy, Tidey.—(1) ? Bapt. 'the son of Tiffany' (?), from the nick. Tidd, and the pet form Tiddy or Tidy; v. Tiffany. (2) Nick. 'the tidy,' the neat in personal appearance and habit.

Stephen Tydy, C. R., 26 Edw. III.
1788. Married—Joseph Piggon and Henrietta Tidy: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 4.
London, 6, 0; Boston (U.S.), 0, 1.

Tidyman.—Bapt.; v. Tidde-man. Nothing to do with tidiness or orderliness. Not a nickname.

London, 1.

Tierney, Tiernay.—Bapt. 'the son of Tierney.' St. Tigernath or Tierney was an Irish saint of the 6th century, and third bishop of Clogher. In the Philadelphia Directory are six Patricks Tierney, two Michaels, and one Terence. This will sufficiently demonstrate the Irish parentage of the surname.

London, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 53, 4.

Tiffany, Tiffen, Tiffin.—Bapt. 'the son of Theophania' (i.e. Epiphany), popularly Tiffany, the pet form being Tiffen and Tiffin. Of course the thin gauzy fabric known as tiffany has the same origination. One of our old mysteries include:

'Megge Merrywedyr, and Sabyn
Sprynge,
Tiffany Twynkeler fayle for no thynge.'

The font-name is found in Cornwall in the 17th century:

1600. Bapt.—Tiffeny, d. of Harry Hake: St. Columb Major.

1695. —Epiphany, d. of Humfry Oxnam: ibid.

A curious entry meets us in the Testa de Neville (Hen. III—Edw. I), p. 317:

'Thephanya Hugo de Harington, prior de Giseburn.'

It reads strangely like a double font-name, a custom supposed to be unknown then. It is a man's name, too. All my instances are feminine. Possibly it was his spiritual name.

Tilden.—Local, 'of Tilden,' seemingly some spot in co. Kent. Perhaps a variant of Tilton, q.v. But this is improbable. I doubt not that the place must be sought in the above-named county.

Tileston; v. Tilston.

Tilewright; v. Telwright.

Tilford, Tillford.—Local, 'of Tilford,' a tithing in the parish of Farnham, co. Surrey.

1808. Married—William Gurr Maymott and Ann Tilford: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 394.

Philadelphia, 2, o; New York, 7, 1.

Till, Tillson.—Bapt. 'the son of Matilda,' from the nick. Till; v. Tilson.

Tilcock.—? Nick. 'the teal-cock' (?), the male teal. M.E. tele; cf. Peacock, Moorcock, &c. If not a nickname, then baptismal from some nick. Till, with suffix -cock; cf. Wilcock, Jeffcock, Simcock. This surname was settled in Oxfordshire for centuries.

(2) Bapt. (?). A pet form of Matilda; v. Till, Tilson, and Tillotson. This second probable origin will help to explain the large number of Tilleys and Tillys in our directories.

1756. Married—John Shipman and Mary Tillie: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 65.

1761. — Thomas Tilly and Susanna Turnedge: ibid. p. 102.

1774. — Henry Tilly and Susanna Whittington: ibid. p. 246.

Tilling.—Bapt. 'the son of Matilda,' from nick. Till, dim. Till-in, more generally dim. Tillot (v. Tillotson). The g in Tilling is excrement, as in Jennings (v. Jennings). Cornwall, the last home of many a decayed font-name and pet form, retained Tillin till modern times.

1691. Married—John Tilling and Margaret Joy: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 209.

1779. Bapt.—Tillane, daughter of William Hewett: Reg. St. Columb Major (Cornwall), p. 135.

Colin is spelt Colane in the same register.

London, 9.

Tillison.—A corruption of Tillotson, q.v. In the same way Ibbison is often a corruption of Ibbotson, and Sissison of Sissotson, all being Yorkshire surnames derived from feminine personal names, viz. Matilda, Isabel, and Cecilia.

1677. Married—George Smith and Hannah Taylor, by Dr. Tillison (i.e. Tillotson): St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 41.

1748. — Richard Tillison and Margaret Stone: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 121.

Timbs.—Bapt. 'the son of Timothy,' from the nick. Tim, patr. Timbs, with exrescent b; cf. Tombs for Toms. Similarly the b is exrescent in timber.

1752. Married—Edward Tymbs and Heneretta Maria Smith: St. Antholin (London), p. 156. London, 1; Oxford, 2.

Timbury.—Local, 'of Timsbury'; (1) a parish in co. Somerset;

(2) a parish in co. Hants. Possibly a corruption of Timperley, q.v.

1771. Married—John Timbury and Ennis Francis: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 209. 1782. —William Jones and Mary Timbery: ibid. p. 333.

Tingay, Tingey.—Local, 'of Tingay (?)'. I do not know of such a place, but as it belongs to the fen district it may be 'of Tingrith,' a village parish in co. Bedford, four miles from Woburn. This place is styled Tyngri in the Hundred Rolls (i. 546), and the surname is similarly spelt:

Petrus de Tyngrye, co. Bedf., 1273. A.

The change from Tyngrye to Tingay or Tingey is not at all a surprising one in English nomenclature.

1610. Married—Richard Tingey and Isabell Flyng: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 46.

1774. — Edward Tingey and Mary Murrow: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 240.

London, 0, 5; MDB. (Bedford), 2, 2; (Cambridge), 0, 2.

Tingle.—(1) Local, 'of Tinghill' (?). Apparently some small spot in co. Yorks.

Ricardus Tynghill, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 199.

Elene Tyngyl, 1424, co. York: W. 11, p. 25.

(2) Local, 'of Tynedale,' a variant of Tindal, q.v. The following entries seem to prove this:

1770. Married—Laurence Tingdall and Margaret Carr: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 302.

1784. — John Tingle and Ann Chamberlain: ibid. p. 361.

In spite of (2) it must be manifest that (1) is the chief parent.

Tining.—Local, 'at the tining,' from residence thereby. 'Tining,' a newly enclosed piece of ground. Co. Wilts' (Halliwell).

Thomas atte Tynyng, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 116.

William atte Tunyng, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid.

Tinker.—Occup. 'the tinker.'

All the early instances are South English; v. Tinkler for North-English form. Travelling pedlars were so called because they made their approach known by tinkling, i.e. ringing, or making a tinkling noise. The mending of pots and pans does not seem to have been the particular pursuit of the mediæval tinker. He was a general pedlar.

'No person, or persons commonly called Pedler, Tycker, or Pety Chapman, shall wander or go from one towne to another ... and sell pyntes, poyntes laces, gloves, knyves, glasses, tapes, or any suche kynde of wares whatsoever, or gather connye skynnes': 5 & 6 Edw. VI, c. 21.

Tinkerson.—Nick, 'the tinker's son'; cf. Taylorson, Smithson, Wrightson, &c.

1588. Married—John Tinkerson and Sibell Lee: St. Antholin (London), p. 33.

Tinkler, Tinekler.—Occup. 'the tinkler,' i.e. Tinker, q.v. The term being North English, so is the surname. 'A tinker or tinkeler': Baret's Alvearie, 1580 (Halliwell). 'Hey! sirs! what cairds and tinklers, And ne'er-do-weel horse-coopers,' v. Jamieson on Caird.

Tinkle is merely the frequentative of tink. Hence both Tinker and Tinkler.

Tiplady.—Local; v. Toplady.

Tipler; v. Tippler.

Tipper, Tepper.—Occup. 'the tipper,' one who mounted mazers, drinking horns, or cups with metals. 'To tip, to put on tips at the ends of horns, brims of drinking vessels, &c.' (Bailey). Possibly he was an arrow-header also, a clumsy term for an important occupation, and sure to have a shorter equivalent.

'Arowe-heders, maltemen, and cornemongers.'

Cocke Lorelle's Bote (1510).

'Arowe-hede, barbellum': Cath. Ang. (1483).

Tipper is still strongly represented in the directory.

Tippett, Tippetts, Tippitt, Tippetts.—Bapt. (1) 'the son of Theobald,' (2) 'the son of Isabella, sharpened forms of Tibbett, Tibbetts, and Tibbitt (v. Tibbatts). The change from b to p is exceedingly common; cf. Hobbs and Hopps, Hobson and Hopson. In the registers of St. Columb Major, co. Cornwall, the well-known family of Tippett are also occasionally entered as Tibbett:

1599. Bapt.—Nicholas, son of John Tibbett: Reg. St. Columb Major, p. 19. 1603.—Hughe, son of William Tippet, p. 21.

John Typpet, 1568: Reg. Univ. Oxf. i. 272.

Tippling, Tippin.—Bapt. 'the son of Thorphin'; a variant of Topping. Turpin (q.v.) was the Yorkshire form; Toppin, later Topping, with excrement g, the Lancashire form. Tippling seems to have arisen in the neighbourhood of Preston, and is unquestionably a variant of Topping, as the Preston Guild Rolls fully demonstrate.

'Bedford Chapel, Bloomsbury. Rev.

S. A. Tipple will preach to-morrow at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.' Standard, Feb. 19, 1887. London, 2.

Tippler, Tippler.—Occup. 'the tippler'; not one who habitually goes in for small potations, as now understood by the term, but a seller of drink, an alehouse keeper. Mr. Lower quotes two 'communes tipulatores' in the records of the Corporation of Seaford, co. Sussex, 36th Elizabeth, who had broken the assize of bread and beer, and were fined 2s. 6d. The same year one Symon Collingham, of Seaford, is licensed as a tippler, and is to abstain from the use of unlawful games 'during the time of his tippling' (v. Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 347).

William Tipeler, co. Linc., 1273. A.

1806. Married—Francis Tippler and Sarah Bayley: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 354.

MDb. (co. Linc.), 0, 1; (co. Essex), 1, 1.

Tipton.—Local, 'of Tipton,' a parish in co. Stafford, near Dudley. The family bearing this name seems to have settled somewhat early in the neighbouring county of Salop.

1585-6. John Typton, or Tipton, co. Salop: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 149.

1616. Edmund Tipton, co. Salop: ibid. p. 350.

1808. Married—Thomas Copland and Margaret Tipton: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 389.

MDb. (co. Salop), 2; Philadelphia, 7.

Tirebuck.—Local, 'of Tarbock,' a township in the parish of Huerton, seven miles from Liverpool; v. Tarbock, of which it is a variant.

Liverpool, 1; London, 1.

Tirrell; v. Terrell.

Tisbury.—Local, 'of Tisbury,' a parish in co. Wilts, three miles and a half from Hindon.

London, 1.

Tisdall, Tisdale.—Local, 'of Teesdale,' from residence in the valley of the river Tees; v. Teasdale for early instances.

1585. Edward Tayler and Johanna Tysdalle, widow: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 141.

1632. Roger Tisdale and Eliz. Gyles: Marriage Lic. (Faculty Office), p. 18.

London, 5, 0; Boston (U.S.), 0, 11; Philadelphia, 5, 2.

Tissiman; v. Tesseymen.

Tissington.—Local, 'of Tissington,' a parish in co. Derby, four miles from Ashbourn.

1768. Married—George Tissington and Margaret Barker: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 179.

London, 1; Crockford, 1; New York, 1.

Titchmarsh.—Local, 'of Titchmarsh,' a parish in the dioc. of Peterborough, co. Northants. To be distinguished from Tidmarsh, q.v.

John de Tichemersh, co. Northampton, 20 Edw. I. R.

Henry de Tichemersh, co. Northampton, ibid.

1756. Married—Philip Foley, clerk, M.A., and Ann Titchmarsh: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 65.

London, 1.

Titford.—Local, 'of Tetford,' a parish in co. Lincoln, six miles from Horncastle.

London, 4.

Titherington, Titterington,

Tittrington.—Local, 'of Titherington,' a township in the parish of Prestbury, co. Ches.

Jordan de Tyderinton, 19 Edw. I.: East Cheshire, i. 264.

William de Tyveryngton, furbour, 11 Edw. II.: Freeman of York, i. 17.

John de Tyderinton, vicar of Sandback, 1356: ibid. ii. 334 n.

1561. Married—John Burey and Ales Tyderinton (of Titherington): Reg. Prestbury, co. Ches., p. 5.

1614. Buried—Thomas Tydderington (of Tydderinton): ibid. p. 204.

1723. Married—Hewitt Tittrington and Rachel Britton: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 248.

MDb. (West Rid. Yorks.), 0, 5, 0; Manchester, 1, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 1, 0, 0; New York, 0, 2, 1.

Tithinglamb.—Nick.

William Tythinglomb, Close Roll, 15 Edw. III. pt. ii.

Titely, Titlow.—Local, 'of Titely,' a parish in co. Hereford. Also v. Tetley and Tetlow, of which in some instances probably these are variants.

1750. Married.—Thomas Tittley and Martha Maria Ballard: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 183.

1790. — John Tittle and Eliz. Newell: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 46.

1798. — Isaac Titlow and Eleanor Cornforth: ibid. p. 181. Philadelphia, o, 9.

Titman; v. Tiddeman.

Titmas, Titmus, Titmuss.—Nick, 'the titmouse.' Not to be confounded with Titchmarsh, q.v. 'Tytemose, bryd, frondator': Prompt. Parv. 'The mouse a titmouse was no doubt' (Halliwell).

1651. Married.—William Titmouse and Anne Pertus, of Ingerston, co. Essex: Reg. St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 258.

In a list of recusants, 1580, presented by the Vicar of Kirkham, co. Lanc., appears:

'Also Diav. Tytmouse, conversant in the company of two widows, viz. mistress Alice Clyfton and mistress Jane Clyfton': Croston's edit. of Baines' Lanc. p. 240. London, i, 4, 1.

Titworth.—Local, 'of Tittisworth,' a township in the parish of Leek, co. Stafford.

Philadelphia, 1.

Titterington; v. Titherington.

Tobias.—Bapt. 'the son of Tobias.'

1774. Married.—Joseph Beal and Ann Tobias: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 239.

1788. — John Tobias and Eliz. Jacks: ibid. ii. 2.

London, 3; Philadelphia, 9.

Tobin, Tobyn.—Bapt. 'the son of Tobias,' from the dim. Tob-in; cf. Col-in, Rob-in, &c. I suspect that Tobin is a French importation of somewhat recent date.

1737. Buried.—John Tobin: St. Antholin (London), p. 200.

1794. Married.—John Harriman and Eliz. Tobin: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 118. London, 4, o; Philadelphia, 80, 2.

Tobitt, Tobbutt.—Bapt. 'the son of Theobald'; v. Tebbitt.

London, 1, 3; New York, 1, o.

Toby, Tobey.—Bapt. 'the son of Tobias,' from the nick. Toby.

'And kan telle of Tobye,
And of twelve Apostles.'

Piers P. 5667-8.

William Toby, co. Linc., 1273. A.
Thomas Toby, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III:
Kirby's Quest, p. 221.

1584. Bapt.—Elizabeth Tobye: Reg. Stourton, Wilts, p. 2.

1801. Married.—Thomas Jinks and Lovey Tobey: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 240. London, 7, o; Philadelphia, 1, 7.

Tod, Todd.—Nick, 'the tod,' i.e. the fox, q.v.; cf. Todhunter, a North-English surname. Halliwell says, 'Tod, a fox, still in use'; v. also Jamieson's Dict. Cf. Lowrie.

John le Tod, c. 1300. M.

1575. Abraham Todde, of Newcastle: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 66.

1597. Robert Baker and Jane Todd, widow: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 240. London, 7, 42; Boston (U.S.), o, 53.

Todhunter.—Occup. 'the todhunter,' from North-English tod, a fox. The surname is still found in Cumberland and the Lake District, and the local nomenclature (cf. Todbusk, Todbank, &c.) still proves a past familiarity with the word. The tod-hunter would obtain a livelihood by keeping down the number of these farmyard burglars. Afterwards, under a statute of Henry VIII, he got twelvepence per fox-head from the parish warden. Todhunter is a great name within the old limits of the parish of Greystock, co. Cumb.

1585. Thomas Todhunter, co. Cumb.: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 147.

1591. Married.—Fraunces Hocken and Margret Todhunter: St. Mary Aldermar, p. 8.

MDB. (co. Cumb.), 10; London, 3; Ulverston, 1; New York, 1.

Todman.—Local, 'of Toddenham,' a parish in co. Glouc., near Moreton-in-the-Marsh. The modifications are quite regular, first Toddenham, then Todnam, finally Todman. This is one of a fairly large class; cf. Tottman for Tottenham, Swetman for Swetenham, Deadman for Debenham. All local surnames ending in -enham seem by some natural law to become modified into -man.

Muriel de Toddenham, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 202. London, 1.

Tofield, Tuffield, Tuffill.—Local, 'at the to-fall' (?), probably from residence beside or inside a pent-house, once called a 'to-fall.' The d in Tofield would thus be excrecent, and imitative of the word field. 'To-falle, schudde, appendicium': Prompt. Parv. p. 495. 'Teefall, a mode of building in the pent-house form, common in Northumberland' (Halliwell); and v. Brockett's North Country Glossary and Jamieson's Dict.

1632. Married.—Edward Sneller and Audrey Tofield: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 64.

1720. — William Murrell and Abigail Tofield: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 296.

1802. — James Tofield and Emily Wiltshire: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 271. London, 3, 1, 1; West Rid. Court Dir., 4, o, 0.

Tofts, Toft.—Local, (1) 'of Tofts,' a parish in co. Norf.; (2) 'at the tofts' or toft. A homestead seemingly amid trees, as it is frequently compounded with tree-names; cf. the old proverb, 'He hath neither toft nor croft,' i.e. without house or land. Tofts implies an aggregation of such dwellings.

Johannes Atte toftes et uxor, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 185.

(3) Toft, a township in the parish of Knutsford, co. Chester, is the parent of the Cheshire Tofts.

Gundreda de Toftes, co. Norf., 1273. A. Eborard de Toft', co. Norf., ibid. Alan de Toft, co. Camb., ibid. Robert de Toft, co. Bedf., ibid. 1394. Hugh de Toft, co. Ches.: East Cheshire, ii. 355.

1580. Married.—John Hatton and Ales Toft: Reg. Prestbury Ch., co. Ches., p. 66.

1585. William Toft, of Buglawton, yeoman: Wills at Chester, i. 193. Manchester, o, 5; London, 1, o; Philadelphia, o, 1; New York, 1, 1.

Toke; v. Tuck.

Tokelin.—Bapt. 'the son of Toke,' from dim. Tokelin. This is interesting as showing the popularity of Toke; v. Tuck.

Richard Tokelyn, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 96.

Margery Toklyne, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid. p. 107.

John Tuckling, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid. p. 159.

Toleman, Tollman, Tolman.—(1) Occup. 'the tollman,' one who took tolls and taxes; v. Toller.

Thomas Tolman. B.

1752. Married.—John Dyer and Susanna Tollman: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 229.

1791. Married — Thomas Young and Patty Tollman: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 56.
London, 5, 1, 5; Boston (U.S.), 1, 0, 6;
Philadelphia, 0, 0, 46.

Tolfree, Tolfrey.—Bapt. 'the son of Thorfrey' (?); v. Fray. I strongly suspect that Tolfree and Tolfrey are modifications of this name.

John Torfray, co. Oxf., 1273. A.
1599. Married—Augustin Clarke and Katherine Tolefree: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 22.
London, 1, 1.

Tollemache, Talmadge, Talmage, Tammadge, Tallemach, Talmadge.—? Local. I can offer no satisfactory solution of this surname. The county of Suffolk seems to have been its original home.

Toller, Toler.—Offic. 'the toller,' a toll-taker by road or in market; v. Toleman.

'Tailours and tinkers
'And tollers in markettes.'
Piers Plowman, Prologue, 438-9.
'Tollers' office it is ill,
For they take toll oft against skill,'
i.e. often contrary to reason (v. Halliwell).

London, 2, 1; Philadelphia, 2, 0.

Tolley, Tolly.—Bapt. 'the son of Bartholomew,' from the nick. Tholy. The following seems to prove a diminutive existed:

'Godus Tholyn-wyf,' i.e. Godus, the wife of Tholyn, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 21.

London, 10, 1; Oxford, 8, 0; Philadelphia, 7, 0.

Tollman, Tolman.—Occup. 'the toll-man'; v. Toleman.

Tolmin, Tolming, Toulmin.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' a curious inversion of Tomlin. I have no absolute proof of this, but I cannot doubt it. If I am wrong, then these names are variants of Toleman, q.v. In Furness and the neighbouring districts, where Tomlin and Tomlinson (now often Townson, q.v.) were very familiar, we find Tolming settled for generations.

John Tolmin, of Bolton juxta Arenas, 1641: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 280.

Tolson, Toulson, Towlson, Towlson.—(1) Bapt. 'the son of Thomas.' Odd as it may seem, these are but corruptions of Tomlinson, and in the Lake District and other parts of North England they have gone through the stages of Towlson and Towlson to Towlson. Townson (q.v.) is the popular modern form.

1551. John Towlsoning, of the parish of Mellyng: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 285.

1587. Richard Towlson, or Tounsoun, of Dalton: ibid.

1672. George Toulson, of Poulton: ibid. p. 283.

1673. George Towlson, of Pilling: ibid.

That this is the true derivation there cannot be the shadow of a doubt.

Tomalin.—Bapt.; v. Tomlin, of which it is a corruption; cf. Ottaway for Ottway, Greenaway for Greenway, Hathaway for Hathway.
London, 4.

Tombleson.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' a corruption of Tomblinson; v. Tomblin.

MDB. (co. Camb.), 1; (co. Norfolk), 1; London, 1.

Tomblin, Tomblinson.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' from the nick. Tom, dim. Tom-lin, with usual excrescent b after m; cf. Timbs and Tombs, and v. Tomlin. The two following names are contained in the list of high sheriffs of Rutland:

1756. Robert Tomblin, of Edithweston, Esq.: Notes and Queries, 1886, Sept. 18, p. 224.

1706. Robert Tomlin, of Edithweston, Esq.: ibid.

1666. Bapt. — Robert, son of John Tomberlin: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 230.

Cf. Thomas Tomblinson, of Kirkham, 1708: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, p. 256.

1664. Buried — John Tomblans (Tomblins), servant to one Bateman, taylor: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 253.

1706. Married — Peter Tombling and Frances Godden: Canterbury Cath., p. 68.

Crookford, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 1.

Tombs, Toombs.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' from the nick. Tom, patr. Toms, with intrusive b after m; cf. Tomblin.

1632. Roger Newcourt and Alice Tomes: Marriage Lic. (Faculty Office), p. 19.

1683. Married — Edward Tomes and Dorothy Collier: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 104.

1701. — Thomas Tombs and Mary Broffe: ibid. p. 223.

1702. — Abraham Russell and Rebecca Tombs: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 52.

Tomes; v. Toms, of which it is a variant. Cf. Times, a variant of Tims or Timms; v. Timm.

Tomkin, Tomkins, Tomkinson, Tomkies.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' from the nick. Thom, by-and-by reduced to Tom, dim. Tom-kin (v. kin, Introd. p. 25). Tomkies, of course, is a corruption of Tomkins, as Perkiss or Purkiss is of Perkins.

Robertus Thomkyn, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 221.

1586. Married—John Tomkyns and Joane Freeman: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 12.

1621. — John Tomkins and Margery Hill: ibid. p. 49.

Tomsett; v. Thomasset.

Tong, Tonge, Tongue.—

Local, 'of Tonge' or Tong, parishes in cos. Salop, Kent, Lancaster (2), and W. Rid. York.

Tongue, of course, is merely imitative. Probably all these places are so termed from the shape of the land (like a tongue). M.E.

tonge or tunge, a tongue. Of Tong in co. Salop it is said, 'The river

Werf commences from the union of two brooks at the western extremity of the parish' (Lewis's Topographical Dictionary of England, iv. 357). The tongue of land in this case might lie between the two streams.

Tonkinson, Tonkins, Tonks, Tunks, Tonkin, Tonkyn.—

(1) Bapt. 'the son of Antony,' from the nick. Tony, and with dim. suffix Ton-kin. Kins becomes ks; cf. Perks from Perkins, Dawks from Dawkins, &c. (The order of corruption is Perkins, Perkiss,

Perkes, Perks.) (2) Bapt. A corruption of Tomkinson and Tomkins;

cf. Sinkinson and Sinkins for Sim-kinson and Simkins.

1569. Bapt. — The daughter of James Tonkinson: St. Antholin (London), p. 20.

1603. Buried—Thomas Tunkes: ibid. p. 151.

Tonson.—Bapt. (1) 'the son of Anthony,' from the nick. Tony; (2) a corruption of Tomson, v. Toms.

London, 1; New York, 1.

Toogood; v. Thurgood.

Took, Tooke; v. Tuck.

Tooker.—Occup. 'the tucker,' q.v. The Somersetshire form was almost invariably Touker.

III: Kirby's Quest, p. 218.

Tookey.—Bapt.; v. Tuckey.

Tooley.—Bapt. 'the son of Toly,' probably a nick. of the immense favourite Bartholomew.

Lower writes, 'Tooley, a crasis of St. Olave. Tooley Street in South-ware is so called from its proximity to the church of St. Olave.' This is true enough so far as the street is concerned, but it is no help to the elucidation of the surname, which probably existed before

Tooley Street was dreamt of. The absence of all prefixes in early registers seems to prove a baptismal origin; v. Tolley. In some instances Tooley may be local;

cf.

Richard Tulegh, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III:

Toomer.—(1) ? Occup. 'the toomer' (?). 'Toom, to take wool off the cards' (Halliwell). (2)
? Local, 'of St. Omer' (?).

William de St. Omero, co. Wilts, 1273.

A common entry in the Hundred Rolls; probably this is the origin:

Richard de Tomere, co. Soms., 1 Edw.
III: Kirby's Quest, p. 218.
Thomas de Thomere, co. Soms., 1 Edw.
III: ibid.

These are strongly in favour of Toon, Toone; v. Town.

Toop, Topp, Toope.—Local.
I dare not hazard a guess at the derivation of this name. Probably Mr. Lower is right in supposing it to be 'at the top,' from residence on some summit of a small hill, corresponding with Bottom, from residence in some hollow.

Total, Tootle.—Local; v.
Toothill. It is related of a Mr.

Tootle, who went rather late to an evening party with wife and daughters, that much tittering was caused by the flunkey's loud announcement of 'Mr. Tootle, Mrs.
Tootle, and the Misses Tootle, too!'
London, 1, 2; New York, 0, 2.

Tooth.—?—Lower says,
'This name probably has reference to some peculiarity in the teeth of the original bearer' (Patr. Brit.
p. 350). Certainly there is some foundation for this. M.E. toth, a tooth.

Toothill, Tootle, Tothill, Tootal, Tottle, Tootell, Tothill, Tuthill, Tuttle, Toutill.—Local,
'of Totehill,' i.e. the look-out hill.
Many spots are so called in all parts of England. A hill with a good outlook against an enemy's approach. There are two Tottle Banks in the old parish of Ulverston, each with a good outlook. 'Totehyll, montaignette': Palsgrave.
'A tote-hill is an eminence from whence there is a good outlook':
Ches. Archaeol. xix. 37.

bote . . . to wayte upon the Kinges grace fro Yorke place to Brydewell, and fro thence to Totehill,' 1531: Privy Purse

'Totehyll, specula': Prompt.
Parv. 'Totehyll, or hey place of lokyng': ibid. In Way's notes thereon he quotes Wyclif's translation of 2 Kings v. 7: 'For-sothe David toke the tote hill Syon, that is, the citee of David.' For various instances of the word, v.

Toovey, Tovey.—(1) Bapt.
'the son of Tofig' or Tovi.
Tofig the Proud was Harold's forerunner in the foundation of Waltham. He appears in Florence as 'Danicus et praepotens vir Tovius, Pruda cognomento.' He signs himself in 1033 as 'Tovi Pruda.' His surname was needed to distinguish him from two namesakes; 'Tovi hwita' and 'Tovi reca' (Freeman, Hist. Norm.
Conq. i. 769). The name is found in Domesday as Tovi or Tovius.
The personal name lingered on long enough to become hereditary as a surname. (2) Local (?).

Tothill.—Local; v. Toothill.

Totiller.—Nick. 'the totiller,' the whisperer; tittle, tattle, and tottle seem all to have been in use. A totiller was a whisperer of secrets, an idle and rather mischievous chatterbox. v. Tatler.

Totman, Tottenham.—Local; v. Tottman.

Crockford, o, 4.

Tottie, Totty.—Bapt. 'the son of Otto.' But possibly the Danish Thjod (v. Yonge, ii. 338). But far more probably the nick. of Otty or Oddy (q.v.), one of the most popular names of the time. Several Yorkshire font-names took an initial T as their nick. before a vowel; cf. Tagg and Taggy for Agg and Aggy. Nevertheless, the instance recorded below, Robertus Thotte, looks very like the Danish Thjod.

Toulmin.—Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' a corruption of Tomlin (q.v.). No connexion, as I take it, with Tollman, a tax-gatherer (v. Toleman). The fact is that Toulmin is a North Lancashire surname, where Tomlinson and Tomlin were almost a clan (v. Townson, Tower-son, &c.). Toulmin simply reverses the two letters m and l (cf. Grundy for Gundry, and v. Broderick).

Towndrow, Townroe, Townrow.—Local, 'at the town-row,' the one continuous line of town or farm buildings. Many places would bear this name; cf. Townend and Townsend. The d is, of course, intrusive; cf. nband, gound, &c. 'Town-row is used to denote the privileges of a township. To "thraw one's self out o' a town-row," to forfeit the privileges enjoyed in a small community. Roxb.; g. a row of houses' (Jamieson's Dict.). For the suffix, v. Row (2).

Townherd, Tunnard.—Occup. 'the town-herd,' i.e. the man who guarded the town cattle; v. Town and Herd, and cf. Coward (Cowherd), Calvert (Calveherd), &c. Lower says, 'Tunnard, an ancient Lincolnshire family. In 1333 the name occurs as Tonnehyrd, and in 1381 as Tunherd. . . . The name may signify the "town-herd," one to whom was entrusted the care of the common herd of a town or village, a well-known office in the Middle Ages' (Patr. Brit. p. 358).

Augustin Tunherd, co. Camb., 1273. A. Adam Tonhurde, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 96.

Townley.—Local, 'of Townley,' an ancient manor in Habergham Eaves, Burnley, co. Lanc. The place gave rise to a family of distinction in very early times. Richard de Townley was sheriff of Lancashire, 1376-1379. The surname is now scattered over the county, either through younger branches of the representative family or humbler stocks. Townley is simply a reversal of the syllables in Layton, or Leyton, or Leighton. Townley emphasizes the relation of the meadow to the farm, the others the relation of the farm to the meadow. Townley means the farm-meadow, the others the meadow-farm. v. Town and Ley.

Townroe, -row; v. Towndrow.

Townsend, Townshend, Townend. — Local, 'at the town-end' or town's-end, from residence thereby. The h in Townshend was an early intrusion. Bridge-end, Pounds-end, Greaves-end, Woods-end, Streets-end, and Wick-end are all found with the same intrusive h in mediaeval registers (v. my English Surnames, 3rd edit., p. 114, for a long list). Townson. — Bapt. 'the son of Thomas.' However odd this may seem to be, it is unmistakably true. Townson is a North Lancashire corruption of the great Furness surname Tomlinson through the stage Townenson. Of this there cannot be the shadow of a doubt. Even now Townson is pronounced Tone-son in the district.

Towson. — Bapt. 'the son of Thomas,' an abbreviated form of Townson, q.v. This corruption is early found in North Lancashire, where Townson and Towson, &c., arose. Towson is thus but a modification of Townenson as that is of Tomlinson.

Tozer, Towzer, Tozar. — Occup. 'the tozer,' or teaser (v. Tasseler), one who tosed or teased cloth, one who carded wool, or raised the nap on cloth.

'What schepe that is full of wulle
Upon his backe they tose and pulle.'

Gower's Confessio Amantis.

A recipe from an old Harleian MS. thus begins, 'Recipe brawne of capons, or of hennys, and dry them well, and towse them small.' 'Toze, the same as touse' (Halliwell), 'Touse, to tug or pull about' (ibid.). Hence 'dog Towzer,' 'Tosynge of wulle' (Prompt. Parv.). 'Tosare of wulle, carptrix' (ibid.).

Tracy, Tracey. — Local, 'of Traci-Bocage,' in the arrondissement of Caen. Settled in Barn-staple, co. Devon, the parishes, manors, &c., of Woolcombe-Tracy, Bovey-Tracy, Minet-Tracy, and Bradford-Tracy bear witness to their local ascendancy; v. Fuller's Worthies, i. 558.

Trader.—Occup. 'the trader' (?). I find no early references to such a name, and am inclined to think it a corruption of Thredder, q.v.

London, 2; Philadelphia, 4.

Trafford, Traford.—Local, 'of Trafford,' a property in the suburbs of Manchester, whence the baronetage of 'de Trafford' gets its title.

Stephen de Trafford, co. Lanc., 20 Edw. I. R.

Henry de Trafford, co. Lanc., ibid.
1572. George Trafford, of Manchester, gentleman: Wills at Chester, i. 194.

Tragetour.—Occupative, 'the tragetour,' a master of legerdemain, a juggler.

'Swiche as thise subtil tregetoures play.'
Chaucer, C. T. 11451.

My first instance seems to imply a misreading of the text:

Richard le Treghele: Kirby's Quest, p. 136.

Symon le Tregetor, co. Camb., 1273. A. William le Tregetur, co. Camb., ibid.
Simon Tregetour, webster, 1379: P. T. Howdenshire, p. 4.

The last instance proves that the merely occupative title had settled down into an ordinary surname, but I fear it has not survived.

Trainer, Tranner; v. Trayner.

Tranter, Tranter.—Occup. 'the tranter,' i.e. a pedlar, a hawker. D. tranten, to walk slowly (Annandale). 'Tranter, a carrier. Various dialects' (Halliwell).

'And had some traunnting chapman for his sire.' Bishop Hall, Satires.

1702. Married—Benjamin Trapp and Ann Hale: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 225.

London, 4; Philadelphia, 5.

Traverse, Travers, Travis, Traviss.—Local, Fr. 'de la traverse,' from residence beside a crossway, a point where roads met. Oddly enough, I have no early instance to show, but the origin is unmistakable. The full form Traverse is found at Rainhill, Liverpool. The intermediate stage between Traverse and Travis is seen in such an entry as this:

1640. Bapt.—Cordwell Traverse, son of Phillip Travesse: St. Dionis Backchurch (London).

Walter de Travers, 1219: KKK. vi. 117.

Hugh Travers, co. Linc., 1273. A. Nigel Travers, co. Bucks, ibid.

1609. Elizabeth Travers, of Bold: ibid.

1614. Elizabeth Travis, of Bold, widow: ibid.

This is proof beyond question that Travis or Traviss is a corruption of Travers or Traverse.

Travis(s).—Local; v. Traverse.

Trawin; v. Trown.

Trayner, Traynor, Trainor, Tranner, Trainer.—Occup. 'the trainer,' probably of horses; v. Ambler. It seems very natural that this surname should be first found in Yorkshire.

Treadhard.—Nick. 'a heavily-footed man'; cf. Golightly and Lightfoot, q.v.

Symon Tredhard, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 141.

Treasure.—? —. O.E. tresor, treasure, a hoard. It is manifest that the Somersetshire Treasures are descended from Nicholas Tresor mentioned below. The only difficulty is to account for the sobriquet. Possibly it is a local surname meaning 'at the Treasure,' a treasurer, one in care of his lord's money-bags; v. Treasurer, Countinghouse, Chamberlain, &c.

Tregarthen, Tregarthian. — Local, 'of Tregarthian.' 'A place in the parish of Gorran, co. Cornwall, where the family were seated temp. Edw. I, or earlier': Lower, quoting Gilbert's Cornwall.

London, 1, o; Oxford, o, 1.

Tregear. — Local, 'of Tregear.' 'A place in the parish of Crowan, co. Cornwall. The family were resident there so lately as 1732. Richard Tregear, of Tregear, was sheriff of the county in 1704': Lower, quoting Gilbert's Cornwall. London, 2.

Treherne, Trehearne, Treharne. — Bapt. 'theson of Trahern.' 'An ancient Welsh personal name, as Trahern ap Caradoc, Prince of North Wales, 1073': Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 354.

1578. Bapt. — Marie, d. William Treherne, cloth-worker: St. Mary Aldermary, p. 59.

1802. Married — William Laker and Susanna Treherne: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 264.

London, 3, 1, o; Boston (U.S.), o, o, 1.

Trelawny. — Local, 'of Trelawny.' Two manors of this name exist in co. Cornwall, one in the parish of Alton, the other in that of Pelynt. The former was the original seat of the Trelawnys, afterwards the latter, which is still the seat of the family': Shirley's Noble and Gentle Men (Lower).

Tremain, Tremayne, Tremaine. — Local, 'of Tremayne.' 'An estate in the parish of St. Martin, co. Cornwall. The pedigree is traced to Perys de Tremayne of Tremayne, in the reign of Edward III': Lower, quoting Shirley's Noble and Gentle Men (Patr. Brit. p. 354).

1704-5. Married — John Forster and Jane Tremaine: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 53.

London, 3, o, o; Crockford, o, 1, o; Boston (U.S.), o, o, 1.

Tremble, Trimble. — Variants of the border name of Turnbull (q.v.), found in co. Cumberland.

Tresillian. — Local, 'of Tresillian.' 'Two places in Cornwall are so designated, one in the parish of Newlyn, and the other in Merther. The distinguished Sir Robert Tresillian . . . who fell a victim to the resentment of the barons at Tyburn in 1388, was of this family': Lower, quoting Gilbert's Cornwall.

Trespas. — Nick.

Thomas Trespas, co. Hunts, 1273. A. John Trepas, London, ibid.

Trevarthen. — Local, 'of Trevarthian.' 'The manor of Trevarthian, in the parish of Newlyn, near Truro, is undoubtedly the spot that gave origin to this family, who in former times ranked among the most distinguished names that have been known in the county of Cornwall': Lower, quoting Gilbert's Cornwall (Patr. Brit. p. 355).

London, 1.

Trevelion, Trevelyan, Trevillian, Trevillion.—Local, 'of Trevelyan,' an estate in the parish of St. Veep, near Fowey, co. Cornwall, where dwelt in the reign of Edw. I Nicholas de Trevelyan, whose ancestors had possessed the property from a still earlier period (Shirley's Noble and Gentle Men, quoted by Lower, Patr. Brit. p. 355).

1734. Married—George Trevillion and Mary Allen: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 66. London, 1, 1, 1, 2.

Trevitt, Trevett.—Bapt. 'the son of Trivet,' possibly a variant of Troite; v. Trott.

Trew; v. True.

Trewhitt.—Bapt. 'the son of Troite'; v. Trott. But it must not be forgotten that there is High and Low Trewhitt, a township in the parish of Rothbury, co. Northumberland.

Nicholas Tryut, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 272. London, 1.

Trewinnard.—Local, 'of Trewinnard.' 'An estate in the parish of St. Erth, co. Cornwall. The earliest recorded ancestor seems to be William de Trewinnard, a knight of the shire, 28 Edw. III': Lower, quoting Gilbert's Cornwall.

London, 2.

Tricker.—Bapt. 'the son of Troggar,' whence Trigger (q.v.), and the sharpened Tricker; cf. Trickett for Triggett, and cf. also Slagg and Slack.

London, 2; Philadelphia, 6.

Trickett, Triggett.—Bapt. 'the son of Trigot,' possibly a dim. of Trig; but v. Traugott (Yonge, ii. 491). It had an unquestioned footing for a time in North, if not South England. Cf. German Traugott, still in use as a font-name.

'But Traugott Waldteufel, for so he was called, profited by his crime hardly at all': Westall's Two Pinches of Snuff, iii. 230.

Trimbell, Trimble; v. Tremble.

Philadelphia, 1, 43.

Trimbey, Trimby, Trymby.

—Local, 'of Thrimby,' a chapelry in the parish of Morland, co. Westmoreland. Probably some other spot was so called in co. Wilts. As a surname Trimby was certain to become the popular lazy variant for Thrimby; cf. Trower for Thrower.

1615. Bapt. — Mary, d. Cuthbert Tremby: Reg. Stourton, co. Wilts, p. 6.

1624. — Andrew, s. Cuthbert Trimby: ibid. p. 7.

Troate.—Bapt.; v. Trott.

Trodd.—Bapt.; v. Trott.

Trollope.—Local, 'of Trollop.' Probably 'hope' is the suffix (v. Hope). Northumberland seems to be the home of the family, but the spot I have failed to identify. They are also early found in co. Lincoln.

Trott, Troate, Trood, Trout,

Trodd.—Bapt. 'the son of Troit' or Trote or Troyt. One of the forms of Trude, found in such compounds as Ger-trude, Hil-trude; formerly a name of itself. Hence 'Dame Trott' in the nursery rhyme (v. Yonge, ii. 235-6). The name is frequently found in the Exchequer Lay Subsidies, co. Soms.,

1 Edw. III, and in various forms is still familiar to that county. Speaking generally, the surname has steadily settled down into Trott.

Trotter, Trottier.—Official,

'the trotter,' a messenger, one who trotted. Skeat says (v. trot): 'Fr. trotter, "to trot": Cotg. O.F. trotter, 13th century: Littré. We also find O.F. trotier, a trotter, a messenger, Low Lat. trotarius, = Lat. tolularius, going at a trot.' It is possible that in some cases it is a nickname from the gait of the progenitor, as 'trotter' for a horse was in use. 'Trottare, horse, succursarius': Prompt. Parv. The first, of course, is the natural origin.

Leon Trottier, French confectioner, in the London Directory, reminds us of the French equivalent.

Trounce; v. Trown.

Trousdale, Trowsdale, Truesdale, Trowsdall.—Local, 'of Trousdale,' a township in the parish of Brompton, near Scarborough, N. Rid. Yorks.

1635. Phines Trusedell (aged 18 years) embarked for the Barbadoes: Hotten's Lists of Emigrants, p. 142.

1679. Buried — Ann Trowsdale, St. Michael's, Barbadoes: ibid. p. 433.

Probably Phineas was the parent of the American Trowsdales, Trousdals, or Truesdales. The different forms are still chiefly found, so far as England is concerned, in the N. Rid. Yorks, in the neighbourhood of Troutsdale.

Trout.—(1) Nick, (?) 'the trout,' the fish so named. The earliest instance I can find is in co. York. It is there we find the surname Bucktrout, q.v. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Trote.' This must undoubtedly be considered the parent. For an account of the name, v. Trott. Scarcely a single seeming fish-name like Salmon, Turbot, Chubb, &c., represents the finny tribe.

Trow.—Local, 'at the trow,' i.e. trough. 'Trow, a trough': Halliwell.

Mr. Lower quotes Mr. Ferguson as saying, 'Trow, Troy, and Try are different forms of True, as Old Frieslandic troue, troiwe, German trou.' It may be so.

The evidence is altogether against it as regards Trow. Residence by an artificial trough, or a natural trough in a stream, seems the inevitable solution, judging by my first and earliest instances.

Trown, Trawin, Trounce, Trounson.—Bapt. 'the son of Trogne.' Peculiar to co. York, so far as I can discover.

Trounce, more correctly Trowns (the s as in Jones, Jennings, Williams, &c.), may be compared with Ellrice for Ellis, or Pierce for Piers.—Since writing the above I find Trounson in co. Devon. I have still more recently met with it in Southport, co. Lanc.

Trowse.—Local, 'of Trowse,' co. Norfolk. This surname still exists in co. Norfolk, where it existed at least five centuries ago.

The parish of Trowse-Newton is in co. Norfolk, one mile from Norwich, and it seems to have been the home of the family.

Originally the village must have been called Trowse, and the Newton has been added later.

Troy.—Local, 'de Troyes,' the French town of that name. It is almost certain that this is the origin. In fact, the following entries concerning one and the same individual may be said to prove it. Copin, let it be noticed, was the pet name for Jacob; v. Coppin.

Truebody.—Nick. 'truebody,' faithful, loyal (cf. Trueman and Truefellow). In the Countess of Leicester's service (18 Edw. I) were several messengers, all bearing names allusive to their office, viz. Slingaway, Bolett (= Bullet), and Treubodie (v. Household Expenses of Ric. de Swinfield, A.D. 1289-90, Camden Soc., p. 143 n).

Truefellow.—Nick. 'truefellow,' an honest companion, a loyal partner; cf. Goodfellow and Trueman.

Johannes Trewfelagh, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 147.

• Truelove.—Nick. 'betrothed' or 'bound,' from the Scandinavian trœ lof, bound in law, a bondsman (Lower, quoting Ulst. Jour. Arch. No. 2). The late Dr. Littleale suggested to me 'betrothed, from Norse at trulofa, to pledge one's faith, to betroth.' Hence the meaning of the paradoxical line in the old song:

'So my true love was false to me.'

The Hundred Rolls form of the surname is Trewelove.

Trundle, Trendell.—Local, 'of Trendle,' a tithing in the parish of Pitminster, co. Somerset. The Norfolk Trundles are clearly descended from the Trendle family in that county, found there so early as 1360 (v. infra). Whether they hailed from Trendle in Somersetshire, or from some spot so called in Norfolk, I cannot say. Undoubtedly the Trendells of Abingdon, near Oxford, came from the Somersetshire tithing.

Tubb, Tubbs, Tubby.—Bapt. 'the son of Theobald.' There can be no reasonable doubt that this is the case. Theobald and its forms have run riot among the vowels; v. Tebb. Tubby is the pet form; cf. Charley and Sibley.

Tubbs is, of course, the genitive or patronymic form; cf. Jones or Williams.

Tuck, Took, Tooke, Tuke, Toke, Tuckson.—Bapt. 'the son of Toke.' The Domesday form was Toka, 'liber homo Stigandi Toka Francigine' (? Toka the Frenchman); v. Freeman, Norm. Conq. v. 768. Mr. Lower enumerates among the Domesday forms of this familiar personal name Toc, Tocho, Tochi, and Toka, also the patronymic Godric Tokeson (Godric fil. Toke). Tycho Brahe represented the Danish form (v. Yonge, ii. 410). Friar Tuck, whether an historic or legendary personage, bears unmistakably the same name. For a diminutive v. Tokelin. Of many instances I furnish a few.

Tucker.—Occup. 'the tucker,' a fuller, or walker of cloth. 'Wollen-weaver, weaving housewifes, or household clothe . . . clothe-fuller, otherwise called tucker or walker' (5 Eliz. c. 4, 23). Tucker is still a great West-country surname, being very strongly represented in cos. Devon, Wilts, and Dorset. As is Lister or Walker (q.v.) to Yorkshire, so is Tucker to these said parts. v. Tummon, Tummond, Tummons.—Occur. 'tom-man,' i.e. the servant of Tom. A curious but natural corruption. Tummon is one more instance of the many Yorkshire surnames of this class; cf. Matthewman, Addyman, Jackman, Ladyman, Bartleman, Sandeman, &c. The d in Tummond is excremental, as in Simmonds or Hammond for Simon or Hamon.

Tunder, Thunder.—Occur. 'the tunder,' i.e. a vintner, a wine-tunner, one who poured wine into barrels or tuns. Hence such terms as 'tunnel' or 'tun-dish,' the vessel used for transferring the wine from cask to bottle (v. my English Surnames, p. 381). For further information, v. Tunneler and Aletunner.

It was inevitable that an imitative variant in the shape of Thunder should arise after the meaning of the surname Tunder had become forgotten. Indeed, it is only in this form that the name has survived. For modern instances, v. Thunder. Lower's and Ferguson's suggestion that Thunder is a personal name and that it is an alias of Thor, the Jupiter-tonans of Northern mythology, cannot be upheld.

Tunnock.—Bapt. 'the son of Tunnock,' an interesting name, found in co. Northumberland so early as the 12th century, and remains as Tunnock in that district still. I strongly suspect that some of the many Tullocks in the Newcastle Directory are not so Scotch as they look, but are an assimilation. Besides, there is a tendency to this interchange; cf. Bannister for Balister, or banister for baluster.

Turnbuck.—Nick. This is a name that helps to elucidate the origin of Turnbull, q.v.

Alicia Turnebuk, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 66.

Turnbull, Trumble, Trumbull.—?Nick. 'turn-bull' (?). There can be little doubt about the origin of this name. Two great clan nicknames grew up in Liddesdale and the 'Debateable Land,' the Armstrongs and Turnbells, both significant of that prowess which was so necessary in the times of Scotch and English raids across the border. To turn the bull at the baiting would be an exploit worthy a sobriquet in those rude times, and the possessor would be proud to bear it. The idea that this name is local must be given up. Trumble is a corruption of Turnbull, not Turnbull of Trumble. The earliest form is Turnebull.

Johannes Turnebull, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 268.

In the same record we find a similar nickname, that of Turnbuck.

Alicia Turnebuk, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 66.

The New York form Trumbull is met with in the 15th century:

David Trumbull or Turnbull, 1494-5: TTT. p. 187.

Turnell.—?Local. Probably a corruption of the Yorkshire name of Thornhill, which is early found in the form of Thornell (v. Thornhill).

Hugo Turnell, et ux, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 151.

West Rid. Court Dir., 5; London, 3; Philadelphia, 1.

Turner, Turnour.—Occup. 'the turner,' one who worked with a lathe. Lower quotes Mr. Ferguson as saying, 'Out of all proportion to the number of persons engaged in the trade'; also as suggesting that the name was in many cases baptismal and of Norman introduction. In a day that knew little of ornamental fictile vessels the turner would be busy enough, and the only wonder is that it is not, as a surname, as common as Smith. A glance at early registers will show how familiar the occupation was. Chaucer's Miller of Trumpington could 'turn cuppes.'

'There dwelled also turners of beads':
Stow, iii. 174.

'Sponers, torners, and hatters.'
Cocke Lorelle's Bote.

To assert that Turnour is local from 'de Tour Noire,' the Black Castle (in Normandy, of course), is childish; and little better is Tourneour, a tilter. There is no evidence.

Turnour.—Occup.; v. Turner.

Turnpenney.—? Local, 'of Turnpenney' (?). I cannot find the spot. I suspect, after all, that Twopeny or Twopenny may be one of the modern forms of this name (v.
Twopenny). From Turnpenney to Turpeny was inevitable, and the step from this to the imitative Twopeny is easy. The assertion that it hails from Tupigny in Flanders is only a guess. I have 'Abbas de Turpenay (C.)' in my notebook. A London firm, Gamble and Turnpenney, were known for many years familiarly as 'Pitch and Toss.'

Twentyman.—Occup. 'the twinterman,' North English, one who tended twinters, i.e. two-year-old beasts. A.S. twy-winter. Mr. Lower says, 'The officer who commanded twenty armed men was called a vintenarius; and of this word I take Twentyman to be a translation' (Patr. Brit. p. 359). There is no evidence in support of this. The corruption to Twentyman is imitative.

Twiceaday, Twisaday.—? —. This curious name has existed for centuries in the district of Furness, North Lancashire. Probably it is a form of Tuesday, as other day-names exist, or existed (v. Saturday, Friday, Monday). Perhaps, like Christmas, Pentecost, &c., it was a personal name given to the child because born or baptized on that day.

Twiss, Twisse, Twist.—Local, 'of Twiss.' The spot is undoubtedly either the hamlet styled Twiss Green, in the parish of Newchurch-Kenyon, co. Lanc., or a place so called in the immediate vicinity. All the earlier instances hail from that district. With Twist, cf. Gorst for Gorse in the same neighbourhood.

Twitchin, Twitching, Twitchings, Twitchen.—Local, 'at the twitchen,' an alley that led from one parish to another, or between two main thoroughfares. 'Twitchel, a narrow passage, an alley. North' (Halliwell). In the South it was Twitchen. The g in Twitching and Twitchings is an excrescence, the final s being genitive (cf. Jennings from Jenin). In Wood's City of Oxford, edited by Mr. Clark, I find, 'A messuage in "Kibald's twychen," that is, I suppose, "Kibaldi bivium," a double way, or a way having two parts, and common to tow parishes, as that was without doubt to St. Maries and St. Johns' (i. 187). Further on I find mention of 'Kepharne's Twychen' (p. 199); and again, 'Sewey's Twychen' (p. 223). That the word was familiar in the hereditary surname period is clear from the following entries:

Richard Twychenweye, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: Kirby's Quest, p. 238.

Henry Twychenweye, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid. p. 234.

Nicholas Twychenweye, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III: ibid.

i.e. 'at the Twychen way,' the way that led to the twitchen, or more probably the passage or alley itself. The surname still lingers in the neighbourhood of Oxford.

Twombley, Twomeley; v. Twemlow.

Twopenny, Twopeny.—Said to be from Tupigny in Flanders (Edin. Review, April, 1855), presumably because there happens to be a place so called. The twopenny piece was an early coin in England; v. topens (Halliwell). Both Fourpence and Fourpenny (q.v.) were English surnames. I suspect Twopenny is a nickname, if it be not a corruption of Turnpenny, q.v.

Twoyearold.—Nickname; cf. Twentyman.

London, 1.

Twyford, Twiford.—Local, 'of Twyford,' parishes in cos. Bucks, Leicester, Norfolk, and Hants. Also chapelries in cos. Wilts and Derby. Probably the place-name arose from the fact that there was a double ford there. Hence the commonness of the place-name; cf. Twycross. Of Tiverton, in Devonshire, Lewis writes, 'This place, formerly called Twyford, Twyfordon, or Twofordon, derives its name from its situation between two rivers, the Exe and the Lowman': Top. Dict. iv. 349.

Tyrrell; v. Terrell.

Tyson.—Bapt. 'the son of Dionise,' from the nick, Dy, whence Dyson, sharpened to Tyson. In spite of adverse criticism I still cleave to this as the true solution; cf. Tennyson (q.v.) for Dennison from the same once popular North-English personal name. The name Tyson has almost assumed the dimensions of a Scottish clan in Furness and South Cumberland. Of the truth of this derivation I have not a doubt; v. Denny, Dennis, Dyson, &c.

Tyzack.—?Local. This curious-looking name perplexed me for years, being well established in Yorkshire, yet without representatives in the Yorkshire Poll Tax, 1379. Several allusions in Brand's History of Newcastle, published in 1789, explain its history. In 1619 Sir Robert Mansell built some glass-works at Newcastle, bringing several skilled artisans, with their families, from France. Of these there were two brothers, married, called Teswicke.

1619. Bapt.—John Teswicke, sonne of Tymothie Teswicke, glasse-maker, a Frenchman (Reg. St. Nicholas): Brand, Hist. Newcastle, ii. 43.

1620. Samuel Tizick, glasmaker (ibid.): ibid. p. 43.

1684. Peregrine Tizack obtained a lease of the 'Eastern glass-houses': ibid. p. 46.

1679. Buried — Abigail, d. of John Tizacke: Brand, Hist. Newcastle, i. 340.

The surname spread with surprising rapidity, all the branches being prolific. Henzell and Tittery were two other French families introduced into Newcastle with the glass-works. The three names monopolized glassmaking in the district for generations. I feel deeply indebted to the clerk of St. Nicholas for adding that one magic word 'Frenchman' to the first entry, occurring as it does in the very year that glass-works were set up.

Upfold, Upfill.—Local, 'at the up-fold,' i.e. the upper pen or enclosure, from residence thereby. Upfill represents a common corruption of fold or field as a suffix.

1713. William Upfold and Anna Maria Cockayne: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 339.

London, 1, 1; MDB. (Sussex), 1, o; (co. Hereford), o, 2.

Upham.—Local, 'of Upham,' a parish in Hampshire. This surname has ramified in an extraordinary manner in the United States.

Nicholas de Upham, co. Wilts, 1273. A.
1749. Married — Joseph Upham and Anne Holt: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 130.

1753. — Edward Upham and Mary Empson: ibid. p. 249.

Upholster.—Occup. 'the upholsterer,' obsolete as a surname.

1397. Alice Upholdesterr: Cal. of Wills in Court of Husting (2).

Upjohn.—Bapt. 'the son of John,' a corrupted form of the Welsh patr. Ap-john (= English Johnson). Such corruptions seem to have been common, as the following entries will testify:

Nycholas ap-Thomas, 1557: St. Dionis Backchurch (London), p. 77.

1563. Buried—John Upharrye, apprentice with John Cooke: ibid. p. 187.

1571. — Hughe Uprice, servant with William Poole: St. Michael, Cornhill, p. 192.

1585. Married—John Peycooke and Margaret Updavi: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 10.

Robert Upprichard, 1637: St. Mary Aldermay (London), p. 18.

Roger ap-John, of Worthenbury, 1638: Wills at Chester (1621-50), p. 124.

Ellis ap-John, of Allington, 1641: ibid.
1750. Bapt. — Francis, — of James and Mary Upjohn: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 293.

Of all the above specimens I have only found two, Upjohn and Uprichard, in modern directories.

London, 4.

Upperton.—Local, 'of Uppington.' Probably a corruption; cf. Catterson for Cattinson, or Patterson for Pattinson. Uppington is a parish in co. Salop.

(Dominus) de Uppiton, co. Salop, 1273. A.

1578. Thomas Upperton, co. Berks: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 82.

1619. John Uppington, co. Soms.: ibid. p. 377.

1789. Married—Joseph York and Eliz. Upperton: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 23.
London, 2; Boston (U.S.), 1.

Upprichard.—Bapt. 'the son of Richard'; v. Upjohn.

Philadelphia, 1; New York, 1.

Upright.—Nick. 'the upright.' Symon Upright, co. Camb., 1273. A.

Five centuries later this surname turns up in co. Sussex:

1787. Married—John Upright, of Heatfield, Sussex, and Ann Holgate: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 397.

Philadelphia, 1; New York, 2.

Upsall.—Local, 'of Upsall,' two townships in the parishes of South Kilvington and Ormsby, N. Rid. Yorks.

Geoffrey de Upsal, co. York, 1273. A.
Richard de Upsale, co. York, ibid.
Robertus de Upsale, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 67.

Cecilia de Vpsale, 1379: ibid. p. 62.
1727. Married—Joseph Upstale (sic) and Mary Poulton: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 3.
London, 2.

Upshire, Upsher.—Local, 'of Upshire,' a hamlet in co. Essex.

London, o, 1; New York, 1, o.

Upton.—Local, 'of Upton,' parishes in cos. Bucks, Glouc., Chester, Lincoln, Norfolk, Somerset, &c., besides many townships scattered over the whole country.

John de Upton, co. Berks, Hen. III-Edw. I. K.

Henry de Upton, co. Hunts, 1273. A.
Richard de Upton, co. Wilts, ibid.
Thomas de Upton, co. Salop, ibid.

Walter de Upton, co. Bucks, 20 Edw. I. R.

1662. Buried — Ralfe, son of Alice Upton, widow: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 233.

London, 23; Philadelphia, 10.

Upwood, Upward.—Local, 'of Upwood,' a parish in the dioc. of Ely. Upward is an imitative corruption.

Thomas de Upwode, co. Hunts, 1273. A.
Alice de Upwode, co. Hunts, ibid.

1697. Thorowgood Upwood (co. Norfolk) and Eliz. Cockayne: Marriage Lic. (Faculty Office), p. 227.

1780. Bapt.—Eliz., d. Henry Upward : Reg. Stourton, co. Wilts, p. 43. London, 4, 1.

Urban.—Bapt. 'the son of Urban,' i.e. polished, city-mannered, a name common to Western Europe, the opposite of Pagan, rustic, simple (v. Pain). Pope Urbanus gave it an impetus. Lat. urbis, a city. Cf. Italian Urbani in London Directory.

Urbanus de Lecheworth, Hen. III. Edw. I. K.

William Urban, co. Hereford, 1273. A. William Urbane, 1519: Reg. Univ. Oxf. i. 3.

London, 1; Philadelphia, 12.

Urcy, Hearsey, Hersee, Hersey.—Bapt. 'the son of Ursey,' the popular form of Urse or Ursel, i.e. Ursula. The aspirate is found invariably in names beginning with a vowel; cf. German Herschell for Urschel = Ursula. Fitz-Urse was one of the assassins of Thomas à Becket.

Ralph fil. Urcy, co. Wilts, Hen. III. Edw. I. K.

Henry Urs', co. Berks, 1273. A. Walter Urs', co. Essex, ibid. Cok' fil. Ursell, co. Worc., ibid. Ursellus (without surname), co. Linc., ibid.

Hursel (without surname), co. Linc., ibid. Henry Hurs, co. Norf., ibid.

London, 0, 2, 3, 3; Boston (U.S.), 0, 3, 2, 10.

Urian, Urion, Uren, Urin, Uran.—Bapt. 'the son of Urian.' Both the masculine Uranius and feminine Urania were in use as personal names. On a Welsh variant Urien, v. Yonge, i. 172. A surname founded on this name seems to have crept into Staffordshire and Cheshire, and thence into Lancashire.

John fil. Urian, co. Hunts, 1273. A. Uryene (without surname), co. Camb., ibid.

1633. Bapt.—Henry, s. Finsby Vrin: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 123.

1635. —Joan, d. Finlye Eurin: ibid. p. 131.

1671. John Urran, of Everton: Wills at Chester, iii. 275.

1680. Alice Urian, of Christleton: ibid. iii. 274.

Uridge.—Local, 'de Ewe-regge'; cf. Udall for Yewdale. Lower says, 'An East Sussex name.

It is found in that district, temp. Edw. II, in the form of de Ewe-regge (Sussex Arch. Coll. xii. 25).'

London, 1; MDB. (co. Sussex), 3.

Urlwin, Urling.—Bapt. 'the son of Urlwin,' one of the endless compounds in -win; cf. Baldwin and Unwin. -win invariably becomes -ing as the surname descends to modern times. Hence the form Urling; cf. Golden, and v. Herlwin.

Richard Urlwyn, co. Oxf., 1273. A. 1581. Roger Urlen, co. Middlesex: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 102.

1665. Thomas Urlin and Rebecca Mills: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 110.

1671. Simon Urlin, of Amptill, co. Bedf., and Anne Robinson: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 197.

1704. Married.—Richard Payne and Mary Urlwin: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 131.

London, 1, 1.

Urmson.—Local, 'of Urmston,' a township in the parish of Flixton, on the Cheshire border; an early corruption, not a form of Ormson (v. Orme). The family of Urmston have many entries in the Prestbury Church registers. Two early ones are given below:

1570. Married—Raffe Urmeson and Isabell Manyfold: Reg. Prestbury, co. Ches., p. 31.

1572. Bapt.—Ellen Urmeston: ibid. p. 37.

Richard Urmston, of Horwich, 1598: Wills at Chester (1545–1620), p. 197.

John Urmson, of Wheelton, 1677: ibid. (1660–80), p. 274.

Liverpool, 4; MDB. (co. Chester), 1.

Urquhart.—Local, 'of Urquhart.' There are places called Urquhart in the shires of Moray, Inverness, and Ross. The family are traced to Galleroch de Urchart, who lived temp. Alex. II. His descendants were hereditary sheriffs of Cromarty (Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 362). Not being an English surname I proceed no further.

London, 7; Boston (U.S.), 6.

Urry, Urie, Hurry.—? Bapt. 'the son of Urry' (?). Possibly the popular form of Urian, q.v. More probably it is local, but I have no proof.

John Harri, co. Oxf., 1273. A. Simon Urri, co. Oxf., ibid.

Ricardus Urry, co. Norf., 20 Edw. I. R.

1677. Roger Barton and Anne Drew, with consent of her mother, Dulsabella Urry: Marriage Alleg. (Canterbury), p. 271.

1748. Bapt.—Betty, d. James Hurry: Reg. Stourton, co. Wilts, p. 31.

1777. Married—John Lewis and Elizabeth Urry: ibid. p. 60.

London, 4, 1, 6.

Urrwen.—Local; v. Irving.

Urwick.—Local, 'of Urwick.' Mr. Lower suggests that it is a variant of Urswick, a parish in Furness, North Lancashire. This is very improbable, as Urswick does not appear to have become the parent of an hereditary surname. Besides, Urwick as a surname is almost entirely confined to South, and especially South-west, England. I suspect it will be found to represent some small spot in the neighbourhood of co. Somerset.

MDb. (co. Soms.), 5; London, 5.

Urwil.—Local; v. Irving.

Usborn, Osborne.—Bapt. 'the son of Osbern,' a variant. We find Osebern in the Hundred Rolls, and this would readily become Usbern; v. Osborn.

Gerard fil. Osebern, co. Hunts, 1273. A. 1521. Christopher Osborne and Katherine Grene: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 2.

1700. Married—William Usbourne and Eliz. Edwards: St. Peter, Cornhill, ii. 63.

MDb. (co. Kent), 1, 4; (co. Hereford), 0, 1.

Usher.—Offic. 'the usher,' 'a door-keeper, one who introduced strangers. M.E. uschere' (Skeat).

Peter le Usser, co. Berks, 1273. A. London, 13; Boston (U.S.), 8.

Usherwood.—Local, 'of Usherwood.' I cannot find the spot, but I doubt not it is in co. Lancaster, where in the modern form of Isherwood it is a familiar surname; v. Isherwood.

1668. Married—Cornelius Thorogood and Jane Usserwood: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 141.

1682. Bapt.—Thomas, s. Thomas Usherwood: ibid. p. 206.

1683. —Thomas, s. Thomas Usherwood: ibid. p. 305.

MDb. (co. Kent), 2.

Utley.—Local; v. Uttley.

Uttermare, Utermere.—Local. Mr. Lower says from the French D'outre mer, from beyond the sea; a foreigner—foreign, that is, in regard to France, from which country the name seems to have been imported. It appears to be almost entirely limited to the county of Somerset. 'I must still believe that it is a native of Somerset till further evidence is produced, and that it is sprung from some small locality in that county. No doubt it is of local origin.'

MDb. (co. Soms.), 5, 1.

Utterson.—Bapt. 'the son of Oughtred' or Utréd. Found early in Northumberland as a patronymic in the form of Utrickson. From Utrickson to Utterson was an inevitable descent. Naturally we find this name in the county where Oughtred was once so popular. v. Outred.

Thomas Utrickson, 1349: PPP. p. 134. 1797. Married—John Outherson and Eliz. Fountain: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 165.

Utrick as a font-name survived till the 18th century.

'Here lieth interred the body of Utrick Reay, son and heir of Henry Reay, Esq., alderman of Newcastle-upon-Tyne: Brand's Newcastle, ii. 120.

Newcastle, 5.

Utting, Outing.—Bapt. 'the son of Utting,' a long-forgotten personal name. As a surname Utting has strongly ramified in co.

Norfolk. 'Utting de Cresswell was witness to a deed temp. King John. Gent. Mag., Oct. 1832': Lower.

Hutting de Schipdon, co. York, 1273. A. Richard Uttyng, co. Hunts, ibid. Adam fil. Utting, 1379: FFF. p. 270. Amicia Vtting-wyf (i.e. the wife of Utting), 1370: P. T. Yorks. p. 191. Married—James Utting and Ann Callingham: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 113. London, 5, 1; MDb. (Norfolk), 13, 0.

Uttley, Utley.—Local. Probably 'of Otley,' two parishes, one in co. Suffolk, the other in W. Rid. York; v. Otley.

London, 0, 2; MDb. (co. Lanc.), 3, 2; Philadelphia, 4, 0.

V

Vacher.—Occp. 'the vacher,' a cow-keeper, a dairyman. Hence in old records the 'vacherie,' a cow-house. 'Vaccary, a cow-pasture. Lanc. "Vachery, a dairy": Prompt. Parv.' (Halliwell).

Alice la Vacher (probably a dairymaid), co. Camb., 1273. A.

1655. Bapt.—George, son of Godfrey Vale: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 192.

1792. Married—John Vale and Mary Fielder: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 79.

London, 8, 3, 3; Philadelphia, 0, 9, 0.

Valentine, Vallentine, Valentin, Vallentin.—(1) Nick. 'a valentine, a sweetheart'; v. Skeat's Dict.

Hugh le Valentyne, Close Roll, 8 Edw. III.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Valentine.' St. Valentine's day is February 14, the season when birds begin to pair. In either case the saint has originated the name.

Valentine Fairwether, Close Roll, 1-2 Philip and Mary, pt. viii.

1578. Matthew Nicholson and Alice Valentine: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 82. 1803. Married—James Valentin and Ann Halfacer: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 275.

The Italian Valentini is englished into Valentiny in the London Directory.

London, 8, 2, 3, 2; New York, 101, 1, 3, 0.

Vallet.—Occp. 'the valet,' a young groom, a young attendant (v. Skeat's Dict.), now valet.

Adam le Vallet, C. R., 5 Edw. II.

Walter Vallet, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III.: Kirby's Quest, p. 185.

Vallis.—Local, 'of Valois.'

1765. Married—John Wise and Joanna Vallis: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 142.

London, 3.

Vann, Van.—Local, 'at the van,' i.e. the threshing-floor, from residence thereby. Fr. van, a fan, a threshing instrument; v. Vanner.

Robert atte Vanne, co. Westm., 20 Edw. I. R.

Richard atte Vanne, co. Wilts, ibid. 1677. Bapt.—Susan, d. Leonard Van: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 279.

1746. Married—Samuel Vann and Hannah Jenkins: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, i. 77.

London, 1, 0; New York, 0, 2.

Vanner.—Occp. 'the fanner.' Fr. vanner, a winnower; v. Fanner and Vann.

Varley.—Local, 'of Verley,' a parish in Essex; cf. Derby and Darby, Clerk and Clark.

Hugo de Verli, 1184. RRR. p. 168.
William Vyrly, co. Soms., 1 Edw. III:
Kirby's Quest, p. 259.
Roger de Virle, or Verly, bailiff of Norwich, 1335: FF. iii. 99.

This Roger was bailiff several times. He is entered Verley in 1343, and Verli in 1344 (FF. iii. 99).

1596. William Varylgh, or Varly:
Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 194.
1801. Married—John Varley and Ann
Silvester: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 246.
London, 6; Philadelphia, 4.

Verney.—Local, a variant of Verney, q.v.; cf. Clerk and Clark,
Parkin and Perkin, &c.

Varnham, Varnum, Var-nam.—Local, 'of Vernham Dean,' a parish in co. Southampton. As usual, the American form is Varnum;
cf. Barnum for Barnham. An early instance occurs in the Hundred Rolls, so our friends across the Atlantic have a long precedent in their favour.

Ralph de Vernum, co. Glouc., 1273. A.
1585. James Varnam, or Vernam,
London: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 148.
1600. Bapt.—Ralph, s. Ralph Varnam, merchaunt tailor: St. Peter, Cornhill,
i. 50.

1624. John Varnham and Eliz. Hol-crofte: Marriage Lic. (London), i. 143.
1802. Married—Charles Varnham and Maria Harris: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 267.
London, 1, 0, 1; Philadelphia, 0, 1, 0;
Boston (U.S.), 0, 5, 1.

Vass.—Bapt. 'the son of Vass,'
Of this early personal name I can supply no history.

Vasse le Poynur, co. Camb., 1273. A.
1601. Buried—Jone Vasse: Reg.
Prestbury, Ches., p. 152.
1784. Married—Henry Martin and
Susan Vass: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 356.
1800.—Thomas Vass and Mary
Plain: ibid. ii. 213.
London, 3; Philadelphia, 1.

Vassar, Vasser.—Offic. 'the Vavasseur' (q.v.), seemingly an early modification.

Nicholas Vausour, 1379: P. T. Yorks.
p. 150.

1743. Married—Henry Vawser and Ann Bullen: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 32.
1749.—James Vassar and Ann Johnson: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 41.
London, 1, 1; Boston (U.S.), 1, 0.

Vaughan, Vaughn.—Nick.
Welsh, 'the little'; cf. English
Little, Bigg, &c. Lower says,
'Vaughan, Welsh vychan, little in stature, a personal name of great antiquity': Patr. Brit. p. 364.
Vaughn seems to be a modern Americanism.

Vavasseur, Vavazor, Vava-sour.—Offic. 'the vavasour,' a principal vassal, holding of a great lord, a man of second rank, one of the inferior nobility. 'Vavasour, antiently a Nobleman, next in dignity to a Baron': Bailey's Dict.
(1742).

'Bothe Knightes and vavasour,
This damisels love paramour.'
Arthur and Merlin, p. 320 (Halliwell).
Reginald le Vavassur, co. Berks, Hen.
III—Edw. I. K.
Adam le Vavasour, co. Bucks, 1273. A.
Mauger le Vavasur, co. York, 20 Edw.
I. K.

This latter personal name was evidently handed down in the family, as the following entry, four hundred years later, fully demonstrates:

1696. Maugre Vavasour, of St. Ann's, Holborn, gentl., and Mary Moor: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 318.
London, 3, 1, 0; Crockford, 0, 0, 1.

Veal, Veale, Veall.—Nick.
'the veal,' i.e. the calf. M.E.
veel, O.F. veel, 'a calf or veale,' Cotgrave (v. Skeat); cf. Bacon.

Veale: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 260.

1700. Married—James Hall and Martha Veall: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 37.
London, 6, 3, 1; Philadelphia, 2, 3, 0.

Veal, Veare.—Local; v. Vere.

Veasey.—Local; v. Vesey.

Venables, Venable, Vennable.—Local, 'from Venables, a parish in the arrondissement of Louviers, in Normandy' (Lower).
One of this family was tenant under Hugh Lupus, temp. William I, so we may say he 'came over with the Conqueror.'

William de Venables, co. Salop, 1273. A.

1616. Thomas Venables, co. Bucks:
Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 356.

ampton: ibid. p. 389.

1690. Married—Ann Venables: St.
Antholin, Budge Row, London, p. 106.

1754.—John Venable: ibid. p. 157.

1791. Married—John Venables and Eliz. Norman: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 61.

London, 12, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 2, 5, 2.

Vender.—Occup. 'the vender,' a seller, a dealer.

William le Vendour. D.
Agnes Vendir, co. York. W. 11.
Thomas le Vyndre, C. R., 7 Ric. II.

I fear this surname is obsolete.

Veness, Venes, Venis, Venus.
—Local, 'of Venice'; an early importation; cf. Jannaway and Lombard. Lower quotes, 'Stephen de Venuse, miles,' but gives no reference.

John de Venuz, co. Essex, 1273. A.
Leonard de Venetia. E.

It is interesting to note that all the above forms exist in co. Sussex, where the surname has long been established.

1623. Married—Henry Venus and Anne
Starte: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, p. 53.

1787.—Thomas Venes and Eliz.
Grocral: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 404.

John Venus, 1745: Blair's Hist. of Ainwick, p. 457.

It may be added that Venus, representing the goddess of love, became a baptismal name; but far too late to have any influence upon surnames.

1631. Married—John Cotton and Venus Levat: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 253.

1756. Buried—Love Venus Rivers: St. Peter, Cornhill, ii. 142.

By Archbishop Peckham's law the minister could have refused to baptize either of the above. 'The minister shall take care not to permit wanton names, which being pronounced do sound to lasciviousness, to be given to children baptized, especially of the female sex; and if otherwise it be done, the same shall be changed by the bishop at confirmation.'

Vennell, Vennall, Venel, Fennell.—Local, 'at the vennel,' i.e. a small street or passage; cf. 'vennel, a gutter, a sink. North' (Halliwell). Cf. Fr. 'Enfiler la venelle,' to run away. Still in use in Scotland for a small lane or passage. From a large number of entries in the Hundred Rolls a few instances may be given.

Venner, Fenner.—Occup. 'le veneur,' a huntsman. Lower's explanation is unsatisfactory (Patr. Brit. p. 111). Besides, there is no difficulty in the solution of the name. The early instances are conclusive. Venner must be carefully distinguished from Vanner, q.v. As regards the initial F in Fenner, cf. Fanner, Venn, Vowell, Fennell, &c.

Ventriss, Ventress, Venters.—Local (?). I find no trace of this surname in the early rolls. Probably it is of later and foreign importation. Lower suggests La Ventrouse in the arrondissement of Montagne, Normandy, as the home of the family.

1586-7. Married—Thomas Ventris and Annes Lyngge: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 11.

Vere, Veer, Veare.—Local, 'of Ver,' 'a parish and château in the canton of Guvray, in La Manche, Normandy' (Lower). Clutterbuck, in his Hist. of Hertfordshire, says, 'de Veer,' from a town so called in the island of Walcheren in Holland. All the early entries by their spelling confirm the former view, save the instance with Baldwin for a Christian name. One single Vere in the London Directory saves the name from complete extinction, save in the variant Veer or Veare.

Verge.—Local, 'at the verge,' from residence therein. Probably for verger (Chaucer), a garden; F. vergier. Chaucer has the form verge:

'Ne had Idenesse thee convoid

In the verge where Mirth him pleid.'

Rom. of Rose.

Richard de la Verge, C. R., 3 Edw. I.

Oddly enough, I cannot light on any instances in modern church registers. But the one quotation above is worth a hundred such entries, as it at once settles the origin of the surname.

Verity.—? —. I cannot classify this surname. The earliest form found in Yorkshire is Verity.

Vickridge, Vickerage, Vick-eridge.—Local, 'of the vicarage,' from residence thereat (cf. Parsonage); probably the housekeeper for the vicar. I can produce no early instance, but the origin needs no explanation.

Vidler.—Occur. 'the fiddler,'

The V here is a connecting link between viola and fiddle; cf. Vowler for Fowler, Venn for Fenn, Vanner for Fanner, and probably the Devonshire Vivash for Fiveash.
For further instances, v. Vowler.

Viel, Vial, Vialls, Vialle,
Viall.—Bapt. 'the son of Viel,'

Hundred Roll entries, which prove Viel to have been a fairly familiar font-name. Vialls is the genitive;

Vigers, Vigurs, Viguers.—
?Official. Probably a modern corruption of Vicars or Vickers (q.v.) through defective and lazy pronunciation; cf. Hicks and Higgs, Hick-son and Higson, and endless instances throughout this dictionary.
This view is confirmed by the fact that these forms are found in co.
Devon and the surrounding districts, where Vowler for Fowler, and Vivash for Fiveash, &c., are, or were, familiar.

bondman, servant. The surname, though common, gradually got dropped as the term became degraded to its later sense.

Vinall, Vinal.—Local, 'of Vine-hall,' an estate in the parish of Watlington, co. Sussex, which was possessed by the family in the 14th century. The estate gave name to the Vynehalls, afterwards of Kingston, near Lewes, who, as Vinalls, in 1657, obtained a grant of arms (Sussex Arch. Coll. ix. 75, and v. Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 367).
The variant Vinal has ramified strongly in the United States of America.

Vincent, Vincett.—Bapt. 'the son of Vincent.' Vincett must be looked on not as a dim., but a corruption. It might naturally be deemed a dim. of Vince, the nick.
of Vincent, just as Emmett is of Emma, or Hewett of Hugh, but there is no evidence of such a dim.
being in use, and no doubt it is a modern corruption of the full name Vincent.

Vowell, Vowle, Vowles, Voules.—(1) Nick. 'the fowl,' A West-country form of Fowell and Fowle, a fowl, a bird; cf. Vivash and Visick for Fiveash and Fishwick. Especially cf. Vowler for Fowler. The genitive of Vowle is Vowles; cf. Brooks for Brook, or Williams for William. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Voel,' an ancient Welsh personal name. Just as Hoel became Howell, so Voel has become Vowell. It is probable that, so far as Vowell is concerned, (2) is the chief parent.

Waddle; v. Waddell.

Waddster.—Occup. 'a wadster,' one who used woad (A.S. wād) in dyeing cloth (v. woad, Skeat). As a Yorkshire entry it may be the parent of Walster and Waltster (q.v.), found in the Sheffield Directory. The corruption would easily arise.

Thomas Waddester, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 285.

Waddup.—Offic. 'of the Wardrobe,' q.v. In Heyford, co. Oxf., and the surrounding districts the variants are Waddrupp, Wadrup, Wadrop, Wardrup, and Waddup. Like wardrobe, one who looked after the wardrobe, a somewhat high official position.

Wade.—(1) Local, 'at the wade.' 'Wath,' a ford. N.E.' (Halliwell). This surname has made such a deep impression upon our registers that there is no need to furnish modern instances. With Wade and Waythe, cf. Ford and Forth.

John le Waider, 21 Edw. I.: ibid. p. 5. Robert de Walcheford, wayder: ibid. p. 2.

This occupative term occurs frequently in the above-quoted work. Possibly the following entry may refer to the surname:

1545. William Lyghtfot and Agnes Wadder: Marriage Lic. (Faculty Office), p. 5.

Wadeson.—Bapt. 'the son of Wade'; v. Wade (2). In Domesday found as a personal name in the form of Wada (co. Dorset), Wade (co. Dorset), Wado (co. Wilts).

London, 3, 0; Boston (U.S.), 1, 28; Philadelphia, 0, 2; New York, 2, 2.

Wadlow; v. Waddilove.

Wadsworth, Wordsworth.

—Local, 'of Wadsworth,' a large township in the parish of Halifax, co. York. In the parish church of Silkstone the name is variously found as Waddysworth (1556), Wardsworth (1656), Wadsworth (1666), and Wordsworth (1668, and forward). Longfellow had for his second name Wadsworth, and was on both father and mother's side of Yorkshire lineage. Query, was the poetic fire of Wordsworth and Wadsworth Longfellow kindled on the same original hearth? The poet's family must have journeyed by degrees from the Yorkshire border, across Westmoreland, into Cumberland, where, at Cockermouth, John Wordsworth, attorney, was agent for the estates of the first Earl of Lonsdale. His son, the poet, was born there in 1770.

I do not find any existing examples in England, but I doubt not they exist. Perhaps Weaver has absorbed this surname.

Philadelphia, 0, 5.

Wager.—Occup. 'the wager,' one who paid or was paid by fixed wages (?); cf. Tasker.

Wagner, Waggener, Waggoner, Wagoner, Wagener.—Occup. 'the wagoner,' a wainman, a carter. Wagon, wain (Dutch), a cart for carriage of goods. Probably as 'Wainman' (q.v.) was the common English term, Wagner is generally of German importation. The following entry confirms this:

James Waggoner, son of James Waggoner, christened at the Dutch Church, 1610: Reg. St. Dionis Backchurch (London), p. 94.

Godemarl le Waghener. DD.

John Wiggoner, co. York. W. 16.

London, 14, 0, 0, 0, 1; Philadelphia, 384, 2, 1, 6, 0; Boston (U.S.), 34, 1, 0, 0, 0.

Wagspear.—Nick. Wag and shake were the two invariable verbs that went to the formation of those vigorous sobriquets by which all officious officials were nicknamed by the railing crowd. Hence Wag-spear, Wag-tail, Wag-staff, Wag-horn (for others not in nomenclature, v. Halliwell). Shakespear having immortalized this class of names, my chief remarks will be found under that name.

Wagtail.—Nick. 'wagtail'; v. Shakespear and Wagspear.

Richard Wagetail. Y.

Waight.—Offic. 'the wait' (q.v.), a natural corruption. This variant led on to the imitative Weight, q.v.

1595. Bapt.—Alice, d. Richard Waight, poulter: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 45.

1610. Rondulph Waight, co. Ches.: Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 311.

1795. Married—John Waight and Charlotte Griffith: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 135.

London, 6.

Wailes.—Local, 'of Wales'; v. Wales. That Wailes is a corrupted spelling can easily be proved. The family of Wales, long connected with Furness and North Lancashire, are found described indiscriminately as Wales and Wailes.

Wake.—Nick. 'the wake' (!), i. e. the vigilant, the watchful (!). Hereward the Wake is said to have acquired his surname thus.

Isaac Wake was University orator in 1607. Dr. Sleep was the foremost preacher in Cambridge at the same time. James I, who dearly loved a pun, said 'he always felt inclined to wake when he heard Sleep, and to sleep when he heard Wake': Brooke's Puritans, ii. 180.

Walborn; v. Whalebone.

Walcock.—Bapt. 'the son of Walter,' from nick. Wal, and suffix -cock, as in Wilcock, Simcock, &c. (v. Cocks). The probable reason why this surname can scarcely be found now is because it has become absorbed into Walcott (q.v.). For a parallel case, v. Glasscock.

Walden.—(1) Local, 'of Walden', a well-known and ancient town in co. Essex, now Saffron Walden. A monastery at Walden gave impetus to the surname. This I have found to be commonly the case. Two parishes, also in co. Herts, have helped, no doubt, to swell the total.

Waldy, Waldie, Waldo, Wilthew.—Bapt. 'the son of Waldeve.' No doubt an abbreviation, or nick. of Waldeve or Waltheof, an early English personal name. This was early corrupted to Waldeve, and the present forms were inevitable. The name was common (I have many more instances) and must have left descendants. As Waltho or Waldie the name crept northwards into co. Roxburgh, and there the surname has flourished for centuries.

Wallen, Walling, Wallin, Wallon. — Bapt. 'the son of Walter,' from the nick. Wal, dim. Wal-in or Wal-on. The g in Walling is excrescent; cf. Jennings, Wareing, &c. v. Walcock for a similar proof of the use of this nick. But it did not make much headway, as Wat soon became the popular abbreviation of Walter. The same individual is thus described:

Wallwork, Wallworth, Walworth.—Local, 'of Wallworth.' A well-known Lancashire local surname, although I cannot identify the spot. No doubt Wallworth is the proper orthography, the suffix -worth (v. Worth) being common in the local nomenclature of South Lancashire; cf. Whitworth, Butterworth, Wardleworth, all places and surnames in the same district where Wallwork or Wallworth is found. Probably the first two following entries concern relatives, as they hail within a mile from one another:

1605. Margaret Walworth, of Prestwich: Wills at Chester, i. 201.

1618. Lawrence Walworth, of Crumpsall: ibid. p. 201.

Walster, Waltster.—Occup. (r) 'the waller' (q.v.), with fem. suffix -ster. Almost all occupative names in Yorkshire took this suffix; cf. Walkster for Walker, Slaster for Slater, Wimplester for Wimpler, and endless others. A waller was a mason, a builder. (2) Probably sometimes a corruption of Waddster, q.v. Sheffield, 1, 1.

Walter, Walther, Walters.—Bapt. 'the son of Walter.' This once popular font-name has left an indelible mark upon our nomenclature; v. Watt, Watkin, Wallen, Waters, and Waterson.

Walworth; v. Wallwork.

Wanklyn, Wakeling, Walk-ling, Wakelin, Wanklin.—Bapt. 'the son of Walkelin.' A Domesday personal name. The l was gradually lost, but in the effort to preserve it, it was resolved into n, and Wanklyn became the later English form. Where the l was entirely lost, the name took the forms of Wakelin and Wake-ling, which now figure more largely in our directories. In Wakeling the g is excrecent, as in Waring or Jennings.

 New York, 1.

Wardrobe, Wardrop, Wardroper, Wardropper, Wardrupp.—Offic. 'the wardrober,' or in local form 'de la wardrobe'; the keeper of the wardrobe. O.F. warderobe, garderobe. The Book of Curtasye says:

'The usshere shalle bydde the wardroper
 Make redy for alle, night before they fere.'

'Wardrobe, a dressing-room. Yorkshire' (Halliwell). It will thus be seen that the b was early changed into p.

Wareing, Waring, Warin.—Bapt. 'the son of Warin.' O.F. Guarin. For excrement g in Wareing, cf. Jenning for Jennin. This was one of the most popular of the Norman-introduced names, and though now obsolete, it has left many memorials. The diminutives Guarinot and Warinot remain in Garnett and Warnett, the full patronymic in Garrison and Wari-son, while simple Waring, Wareing, and Warren (v. Warren, 2) fill columns of the London Directory.

Warham; v. Wareham.

Warin(g); v. Wareing.

Warinot, Warnett.—Bapt. 'the son of Waren' (O.F. Guarin), from dim. Warin-ot; cf. Philipot, Mariot, Wilmot (Philip, Mary, William). The present form is Warnett. I had a modern instance, but have lost it.

Robert Warinot, co. Hunts, 1273. A. William Warinot, co. Kent, 20 Edw. I. R.

Warison.—Bapt. 'the son of Warin' (v. Wareing). This surname is quite enough to prove the early popularity of the Norman font-name of Guarin. The abbreviation of Warinson to Warison presents no difficulty; cf. Pattison for Pattinson.

Watmough, Watmuff, Whatmore, Whatmough.—

Nick. 'Wat's brother-in-law,' i.e. the brother-in-law of Walter, familiarly Wat. A very interesting North-English surname, and one of a small but distinct class (v. Muff and Hitchmough) compounded of the Christian name and maghe or mauf, probably in general a brother-in-law, though other relationships are included. 'Maug, a brother-in-law. North E.' (Halliwell). 'Mauf, Maugh, or Meaugh, abrother-in-law' (Brockett). 'Mow, husbandys syster, or wyfys systyr, or syster-in-lawe' (Prompt. Parv.). 'Mauf denotes a brother-in-law.

N. of E.' (Grose). 'A.S. mag or mag, the guttural sound being changed into that of f, as in laugh' (Jamieson). Only a few of these compounds have come down to us in the form of surnames, Watmough and its variants being the prominent instance. The Yorkshire Poll Tax, however, has several others, which although now obsolete are uncontrovertible evidence of the former familiarity of such titles.

With the above we must cf. the Yorkshire Barnfather (the child's father).

Watt, Watts, Watson, Wattson.—Bapt. 'the son of Walter,' from nick. Wat. Walter being one of the great fontal names of the 13th and 14th centuries, and Wat being the popular nick, it can scarcely be a matter for surprise that Watts and Watson are two of our most familiar surnames. They are confined to no particular district. There is no need to quote from modern registers. Everybody has a friend or acquaintance bearing one or other of the above forms.

London, 8.

Wagh.—!— This name is occasionally found in co. Cumb., especially in the neighbourhood of Wigton. Probably it is of Scotch descent, having crossed the Border. Mr. Lower says (Patr. Brit. p. 374), 'The Waughs of Help, co. Roxburgh, held these lands from the 13th to the 17th century.' In this case the name does not come within the scope of this dictionary.

Weatherby, Wetherby, Weatherbee, Wetherbee.—Local, 'of Wetherby,' a market-town in the parish of Spofforth, W. Rid. Yorks. This surname has thriven better in the United States than in England. Wetherbee is an Americanism, but not entirely unknown in this country; cf. Applebee.

Robertus de Wetherby, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 249.
London, 1, 0, 0, 0; Philadelphia, 5, 4, 0, 2; Boston (U.S.), 0, 0, 6, 48.

Weatherhead, Wetherherd, Weathered, Wethered.—Occup. 'the wether-herd'; v. Herd, and cf. Coward, Stoddart, Oxnard, Calvert, &c. The wetherherd was a tender of rams. The change of the suffix -herd into -head was a natural one, and is now all but universal.

Weatherhog, Weatherhogg.—Nick. 'the wether-hog.' 'A male, or heder-hog. Also a surname in the county. Linc.' (Halliwell); cf. Hoglamb, an early Lincolnshire surname.

MDb. (co. Lincoln), 1, 6; London, 0, 1.

Weaver.—Occup. 'the weaver.' Webster, with the fem. suffix

-ster as in spinster, was so much more popular that Weaver has not pushed its way into the directories so successfully as might have been expected. But in America it has prospered wonderfully. The simple Webb (q.v.) also took from the success of this name.

1522. George Wever: Reg. Univ. Oxf. i. 129.

Wedlake, Wedlock.—? Local.

Lower, quoting Ferguson, says,

'from an old German personal name Widolaic' (Patr. Brit. p. 375).

I find no trace of this name on English soil. Wedlock is evidently imitative.

London, 1, 1, 0; New York, 0, 8, 2.

Weight.—Official, 'the wait,' i.e. the watchman (v. Wayt and Wait). This, of course, is an imitative form. Weight conveyed a meaning when the original sense of Wait was forgotten.

1610. Buried—Richard Weight, free of the Poulterer: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 165.

1805. Married—Samuel Weight and Joyce Smith: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 326.

London, 3; Philadelphia, 1; New York, 2.

Weightman.—Nick. 'the wightman,' i.e. the brave strong man. Although weightman, 'a weigher,' seems the natural derivation, we are on much safer ground in referring it to Wightman (q.v.), as being a variant of that name.

1613. Bapt.—Eliz, d. Peter Weightman: St. Peter, Cornhill, i. 62.

1796. Married—John Weightman and Matilda Harpum: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 146.

Welfare, Welfear.—? Nick, 'well fare,' an expression of good will (?). I see no reason to doubt this origin. Nevertheless, Lower writes, 'Probably from Wifare, or rather Wulpher, a personal name, occurring in Domesday': Patr. Brit. p. 376. This, of course, was the old personal name Ulfr, coming in such local names as Ulverston, Wolverhampton, &c. My instance is so early in its unaltered form that I prefer my own view; cf. Welcome.

Whitehead.—Nick. 'with the white head,' a common sobriquet, as our records prove, especially in North England; cf. Hoar. There is no evidence of a local origin, although Redhead and Blackett (Blackhead) are, like Greenhead, local occasionally. Modern instances are needless. The name exists wherever Englishmen settle.

Whitsunday.—?Bapt. Pentecost was once a familiar font-name; cf. Nowell, Pask, and Christmas. As confirmations were general on Whitsunday, and it was a common circumstance to change the baptismal name then, it was natural that Pentecost, or 'Whitsunday,' should sometimes become the new name. The candidates were addressed by name till 1552. For the rule concerning the exchange of names—under exceptional circumstances—laid down by Archbishop Peckham, v. my Curiosities of Puritan Nomenclature, p. 75.

Wigg, Wiggs, Wigson. — Bapt. 'the son of Wig' (v. Lower, Patr. Brit. 'Wigg,' and Yonge, Christian Names, ii. 409). As a personal name the forms in Domesday are Wiga (cos. York and Bucks), Wige (co. York), and Wig (co. Bedford). Another early form of Wig was Vig (Yonge, ii. 409), whence possibly Figg, Figgs, and Figgin (q.v.). Another form, Wigel, was once common in Holland, and is found in Wigglesworth, co. York.

Thomas Wigge, Close Roll, 3 Edw. I. Robert Wigge, co. Kent, 20 Edw. I. R. William Wygge, Pardons Roll, 5 Ric. II. 1586. Bapt.—Agnes Wiggess, daughter of William Wigs: St. Peter, Cornhill, 1.30. 1715. Wiggin, Wiggins, Wigan, Wigans, Wigan, Wiggins, Wigand.—Bapt. 'the son of Wigand' (v. Yonge, ii. 409). This personal name has made a deep impression upon English nomenclature, and just as Stigand became Stiggin and Stiggins, so Wigand became Wiggin and Wiggins. As regards Wigan, this has in some cases a local parentage (v. Wigan). The final s in Wiggins, &c., is genitive; cf. Williams, Jones, &c.

Wightman, Weightman, Whiteman, Wheatman.—(1) Nick. 'the wightman.' A.S. wight, active, brave, strong.

'A wightman of strengthe.' Piers P. 5195.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Wigmann' (Yonge, ii. 410). It is clear from the evidence that there was some difficulty in pronouncing this early personal name:

Alexander Wigman, co. Northampton 1273. A. Geoffrey Wygeman, or Wygman, or Wigeman, co. York, ibid. Johannes Wyghman, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 63.

Willelmus Wyghman, 1379: ibid. Johannes Wyghman, 1379: ibid. Richard Wightman, co. York. W. 15. William Whytman. B. Audrey Whiteman, temp. Eliz. Z.

I strongly suspect the baptismal origin (2) is the correct one. I believe also that all the four modern directory forms given above are varieties of one name. If there were evidence enough (1) would be a tempting solution.

Wimble.—Local, 'of Wyimbull,' I cannot find the spot. The suffix is -hull (v. Hull). It is quite natural to find the surname drop into the form of Wimble. Such modifications are common; cf. Cockle, Windle, &c.

Roger de Wyimbull, co. Bedf., Hen. III.—Edw. I. K.

Probably Wimble is a variant. It is found in the same district as the above.

Winkle, Wincle, Winkel.

—(1) Local, 'of Wincle,' a township near Macclesfield, on the extreme border of Cheshire, only separated from Staffordshire by the river Dane. It is called 'Winchul,'

c. 1200 (East Cheshire, ii. 432), so we may presume that -hill is the suffix; cf. Windle, Cockle, &c.

1779. Married — John Grange and Mary Winkell: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 298.

(2) Nick, 'the winkle,' the periwinkle. I do not suppose this bears any relation to our present Winkles, but it is worth while recording the following entry:

John le Wenchel, co. Bucks, 1273. A. Manchester, 1, 0, 0; Liverpool, 0, 1, 0; New York, 5, 2, 0; Philadelphia, 2, 3, 0.

Winkley.—Local, (1) 'of Winkley,' or Winkleigh, a parish in co. Devon; (2) 'of Winckley,' a hall and estate in the township of Aighton, and parish of Mitton, co. Lanc. Hence the Lancashire surname. 'In the Coucher Book of the neighbouring abbey of Whalley, the name of Robert de Winkedeleghe occurs in 4 Edw. I' (Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 385).

Winn(e).—Nick; v. Wynn.

Winnicott; v. Wincott.

Winpenny, Wimpeny, Wimpory, Wimpory.—? Nick. 'Winpenny' (cf. Pennyfather). Perhaps what it looks, 'Win-penny,' a sobriquet for one of 'acquisitive habits.' But the entry which manifestly is the same name, seems a somewhat early contradiction of this view. In any case, Wimpory appears to be a corruption.

Winter, Wynter.—Bapt. 'the son of Winter.' The ecclesiastical seasons all made their mark on the font; cf. Pentecost, Whitsunday, Noel, Nowell, Christmas, Middlemass (Michaelmas). The natural seasons gave personal names in the same way. 'Summer and Winter are both ancient names; in the Cod. Dip. Alamanniae there are two brothers called respectively Sumar and Winter, A.D. 858. Winter was also the name of one of the companions of Hereward the Saxon' (Ferguson, Surnames as a Science, p. 182). Although a pre-Norman personal name, Winter survived the Conquest, and attained hereditary honours as a surname in the 13th cent. We may observe here that Winter is compounded with several local surnames, such as Wintersgill, Winterbotham, Winterburn, or Winterflood. Professor Skeat shows that winter means literally the wet season. In these place-names we recognize low-lying hollows or streams liable to be flooded by winter rains, although dry in the summer.

Winterbottom, Winterbotham.—Local, 'of Winterbottom'; for origin, v. Winter. Like most of the surnames whose suffix is the local -bottom, Winterbottom arose in the south-east corner of Lancashire, on the Cheshire and Yorkshire borders. It is believed that Saddleworth is its precise and original habitat; v. Higginbotham, Shufflebottom, and Botham.

1564. Married — John Dowley and Agnes Winterbotham: Reg. Prestbury Ch. (Cheshire), p. 14.

Winterscale, Wintersgill.—Local, 'of Winterscale,' i.e. the winter cot or hut; v. Scales. Wintersgill is a corruption, though -gill is a local suffix; cf. Summer-scales and Summersgill. The spot whence the surname arose lies in the parish of Ingleton, W. Rid. Yorks.

Adam le Wolf. H.

Philip le Wolf, 1306. M.

(2) Bapt. 'the son of Wolf,' or Ulf, a personal name, once so familiar that our local nomenclature could not escape its influence, as in Ulverston, Wolverton, Wolvesey, Wolvercote, Wolverley, Wolverhampton, Wolferton, &c. The Index to Freeman's Norm. Conq. will show that Ulf or Wolf was almost as common a personal name in England as in Iceland or Denmark. See also Miss Yonge, ii. 267. Ulf, son of Tur-ulf, witnessed the foundation charter of St. Mary's Priory, Lancaster (Baines' Lanc. ii. 654). Another Ulf married Cantute's sister; yet a third was Bishop of Dorchester.

Wolfhound.—Nick. 'the wolfhound'; one more incidental proof of the existence of wolves at the period.

Robert Wolfhound, Fines Roll, 12 Edw. I.

Wolfhunt. — Occup. 'the wolf-hunt,' a hunter of wolves, from wolf, and Middle English hunte, a hunter, the latter being a later form (v. Hunt). Wolves were found in England longer than is supposed. A writ of Edward I (1281) commissions Peter Corbet to kill wolves in Gloucester, Worcester, Hereford, Shropshire, and Stafford (Rymer, i. 591). A family of this name held lands in Derbyshire by service of keeping down the wolves in Peak Forest (Arch. Assoc. Journal, vii. 197). John Engayne held lands (1273) in Huntingdonshire by tenure of maintaining dogs for the king's wolf-hunting (Hundred Rolls, ii. 627, quoted by Lower). An entry still later, relating to the district about Whitby, co. York, is interesting:

Wollaston.—Local, 'of Wollaston': (1) a parish in co. Glouc., near Chepstow; (2) a parish in co. Northampton, near Wellingborough; (3) a chapelry in co. Salop, nine miles from Shrewsbury; (4) a manor in the parish of Old Swinford, co. Stafford, which early gave rise to a surname (v. Lower's Patr. Brit. p. 388).

Wolsey, Woolsey. — Bapt. 'the son of Wulsi.' At first sight the name seems local, and an abbreviation of Wolseley, q.v. A parallel is found in the case of the famous founder of Wesleyanism, whose latest biographer shows that his progenitors were Wellesleys. But no doubt can exist on the subject. Wolsey is a modern form of the personal name Wolsi or Wulsi. Lower (Patr. Brit. p. 388), quoting from Fuller's Worthies, reminds me that St. Wulsey was first abbot of Westminster.

Wolstencroft, Wolsoncroft, Woolstencroft, Wozencroft, Worsencroft.—Local, 'of Wolstancroft,' i.e. the field or enclosure of Wulstan, the first settler or owner; cf. Wolstenholme, found in the same district of South Lanc. The corrupted Wozencroft looks queer. It is merely a variant of the already modified Wolsoncroft.

Woodend.—Local, 'at the wood-end,' one who lived at the end of the wood; cf. Fieldsend, Townsend, and the place-name Gravesend. This surname still exists in Furness, North Lancashire. My instances prove it to have been there for 300 years at least. No doubt it has existed there for six centuries.

Adam de Wodeshende, co. Dorset, 1273. A.

With this, cf. Townend and Townshend. The h is, of course, intrusive.

1601. Bapt.—Richard, s. Nicholas Woodend: St. Mary, Ulverston, i. 91. Nicholas Woodend, of Ulverston, 1624: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 320. James Woodend, of Lowick, 1662: ibid.

Wooder; v. Woodger.

Wooderson, Woodson.—Bapt. 'the son of Wodard' (?) ; v.

Woodard. The only other etymology is 'Widowson,' q.v. But this seems somewhat forced. Upon careful consideration I see no reasonable doubt in accepting Woodard as the parent. It must be remembered that that baptismal name was popular in the hereditary surname period.

Woodger, Woodyer, Woodyears, Wooder.—Occup. (1) 'the wooder,' i.e. the woodman; (2) 'the wood-hewer,' i.e. a wood-chopper. Both these names have resolved themselves into Woodger and Woodyer; cf. Sawyer for Sawer, or lawyer for lawer, or pavier for paver. With the corrupted Woodger for Woodyer, cf. Goodger for Goodier. As regards Woodhewer, that would naturally and inevitably become Woodyer.

Robertus Woolchapman, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 159.

Wooldridge, Wooldredge.—Bapt. 'the son of Wulfric'; v. Woolrich. The d is intrusive.

Wooler, Wooller, Woller.—Local, 'of Wooler,' a parish in co. Northumberland. The surname having settled in Yorkshire has led to the impression that it meant a wool-merchant. There is, I believe, no evidence of this. The above is the natural solution.

Woolman, Wolman, Wollman.—Occup. 'the woolman,' a wool-buyer. This surname crossed the Atlantic, and has 'increased and multiplied' there. The original emigrant must have started early in the 17th century. If he had several boys, who lived, married, and had large families, the large number of Woolmans in America is easily accounted for. For opposite reasons Woolman is in danger of extinction in England.

Woolrich, Woolrych, Wolrige, Woollright, Wooldridge, Woolridge, Wooldredge.—Bapt. 'the son of Wulfric' (v. Ulfric, Yonge, ii. 269), one of the many compounds of Ulf or Wolf; cf. Orme and Worm, Ulph and Wolff (2). Adam Wulfric was admitted to the Roll of Guild Merchants of Shrewsbury in 1231. He is the ancestor of the Shropshire Wolryches (Shirley's Noble and Gentle Men, quoted by Lower). Woolston, Woolson, Wol-ston, Wolson.—(1) Local, (a) 'of Wolstan,' a parish in co. Warw., near Rugby; (b) 'of Woolstone,' two parishes near Newport Pagnell, co. Bucks; (c) 'of Woolston,' a hamlet in the parish of North Cadbury, co. Somerset; and (d) 'of Woolstone,' a tithing in the parish of Hound, co. Devon. With the corrupted Woolson, cf. Kelson for Kelston (q.v.). There can be little doubt that in some instances Wollaston and Wolston have become mixed up. (2) Bapt. 'the son of Wolfstan' (v. Yonge, ii. 269). The probability is that (1) is the correct derivation.

Wootton, Wootten, Wooton,

Wotton, Wooten.—Local, 'of Wootton'; (1) a parish in co. Bedford; (2) a parish in co. Berks, near Abingdon; also parishes in cos. Kent, Lincoln, Northampton, Oxford, Southampton, Stafford, &c., besides many hamlets and manors scattered over the country; also Wotton, a parish in co. Surrey. No doubt the origin is Wood-town, 'the enclosure in the wood.' This would at once explain the frequency of its occurrence as a place-name.

1598. John Worthington, of Warrington: Wills at Chester, i. 218.
1613. Edward Worthington, of Worthington: ibid.
1616-7. Married—John Hollywell and Joyce Worthington: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 19.
Manchester, 33; London, 7; Philadelphia, 57; Boston (U.S.), 11.

Worthy.—Local, 'at the worthy,' i.e. the worth, q.v.; cf. Kenworthy, Langworthy, &c.

1730. Bapt.—John, s. John Worthy: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 187.
1806. Married—William Worthy and Ann Griffiths: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 352.
New York, 1.

Wortley.—Local, 'of Wortley,' two villages, near Leeds and Sheffield.

John de Wortlay, taillour, 8 Edw. III.: Freemen of York, i. 28.
Johannes de Wortelay, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 89.

1621. Thomas Wortlye, co. York: ibid. p. 395.
1746. Married—Joseph Wortley and Eliz. Ryall: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 69.
Sheffield, 4; West Rid. Court Dir., 5; London, 3; New York, 2.

Worton.—Local, 'of Worton,' several villages so called in co. Oxford.

Adam de Worton, co. Oxf., 1273. A.
Nicholas de Worton, co. Oxf., ibid.
1669. Married—Richard Worton and Mary Pace: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, p. 167.
London, 2; Philadelphia, 2; Boston (U.S.), 3.

Wostenholm, Wostinholm, Wostenholme.—Local; v. Wolstenholm. Variants peculiar to Yorkshire.

Sheffield, 7, 1, 0; Philadelphia, 5, 0, 2.

Wotherspoon; v. Wither-spoun.

Wotton; v. Wootton.

Wozencroft; v. Wolstencroft.

Wragg, Wragge, Wraggs.—Bapt. 'the son of Ragg,' q.v. The early form is Ragg, clearly allied to Ragn, 'judgement' (Yonge, ii. 374), the chief element of such names as Ragner, Reginald, Raginbald, Raginmund (Raymond), and once a familiar nick, of Ragner, or Ragnar. For w, cf. Wray and Ray. Wragg has almost ousted Ragg, but the reason is obvious. The name seems peculiar to Yorkshire.

Wray, Ray.—Local, 'at the wray,' i.e. in the corner, from residence therein (v. Wroe). Ray in North Lanc. represents Wray as a surname, although surrounded with numberless spots called Wray, or of which Wray is an element. This word means a corner (as of a field or yard) or secluded place. Mr. Atkinson (N. and Q. 1885, p. 252) finds a case of 'in le Wra' or 'del Wra' translated into 'in angulo' and 'in le herne' (v. Hearn and Nangle), and quotes 'Roger in le Wra' in Whorlton, 'Walter del Wra,' in Marske, and 'Robert in le Wra' in Thorgenby (1301). (Taxatio quindecimoe D'no Regi concessor in Com. Ebor. in parte de Northriding.) Among the compounded place-names are Dock-wray, Whin-wray, Capon-wray, and Thack-wray, all self-explanatory; cf.

Isabel Dockraye, 1560: Lancashire Wills at Richmond, i. 95.
John Whinwray, of Dalton, 1591: ibid. i. 307.

Also cf.

Antony Sawraye, of Plumpton, 1623: ibid. p. 245.
John Blackburne, of Caponwray, 1636: ibid. p. 36.

In fact, the compounds are many; cf.

Johannes de Somerscalewra, et uxore, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 286.
Johannes de Somersscale, junior, et uxore, 1379: ibid.

Amongst many instances I select the following:

Thomas de Ireby, in le Wra, in Villa de Bolton: E. & F., co. Camb., p. 175.
Thomas del Wra, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 242.
1598. Married—Thomas Johnson and Jane Wraie: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, iii. 21.
1616. — Richard Phelke and Eliz. Raye: ibid. iii. 42.
1640. — Edward Wraye and Eliz. How: ibid. p. 72; Philadelphia, 51, 59; Boston (U.S.), 5, 58.

Wreaks.—Local, 'of Wreaks.' I cannot find the spot. Wreaks-end (i.e. the end of the Wreak or Wreaks) is the name of an estate near Broughton-in-Furness.

Alicia de Wrekes, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 236.
1730. Bapt.—Leonard, s. Leonard Wreaks: St. Jas. Clerkenwell, ii. 186.

London, 11, 1; Philadelphia, 6, 0; New York, 8, 3.

Wrench.—? Bapt. 'the son of Wrench' (?). Found without prefix in the Hundred Rolls. It is a common entry, and scattered over many counties. The conclusion that it is baptismal is almost irresistible. One entry below seems to decide the question.

John Wrenche, co. Wilts, 1273. A.
Robert Wrench, co. Oxf., ibid.
Peter Wrench, co. Suff., ibid.
Warin Wrench, co. Bedf. ibid.

1741. Bapt.—James, s. James Wrightson: St. Geo. Chap. Mayfair, p. 2.
1742. Married—Alex. Wright and Mary Harwood: ibid. p. 22.

Wrightson belongs to an extremely small but interesting class; cf. Smithson, Hinson, Taylorson, and Herdson.

London, 380, 3; Philadelphia, 586, 4.

Wrigley.—Local, 'of Wrigley.' This name seems to have passed over the borders from the W. Rid. Yorks. into South-East Lanc. via Saddleworth, in which district it still possesses a strong foothold.

Willelmus Wryglegh, 1379: P. T. Yorks. p. 173.

Wulf(e, Wulff; v. Wolff.

Wulfkettle, Wulfskill.—Bapt. 'the son of Wolf-kettle' (v. Ulfkettle). The abbot of Croyland, 1062–86, was Ulfcytel or Wulfsketyl. His predecessors were Osketyl in 992, and Turketyl in 941. All compounds of Kettle (q.v.).
Wulfskill of Lincoln: Freeman's Norman Conq. iv. 217.

Wulfson; v. Wolfson.

Wurster; v. Worcester.

Wyard, Wyart.—Bapt. 'the son of Wygard' (Yonge, ii. 410). Now almost entirely lost in Wyatt, q.v.

Lena Wyard, co. Suff., 1273. A.
Adam Wyard, co. Camb., ibid.
Robert Wyard. D.
John Wyard. D.
John Wyhard, co. Worc., Hen. III.—Edw. I. K.
Wiard le Corner, Wardrobe Accounts, 3 Edw. III.

The following may be placed here, but probably is a variant of Wyatt, q.v.:

1788. Married—Samuel Jesse and Mary Wyett: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 10.
London, 1, 0; New York, 0, 1.

Wyatt, Whyatt, Wiatt.—Bapt. 'the son of Guy,' from dim. Guy-ot, in England Wyot (cf. Warin for Guarin, Warner for Garnier, Wilmot for Guillemot); v. Guion.

'Adam, son of Wyot, held an oxgang of land': De Lacy Inquisition.

1581. John Wyatt, or Wiat, co. Worc.:
ibid. p. 103.
1603. Francis Wiat, co. Kent: ibid.
p. 267.

It is clear from the above that the present form Wyatt is of fairly recent growth, and will now remain the recognized orthography for the coming ages.

Wybert; v. Wiberd.

Wybroo, Wybrow.—(1) Local, 'of Wigborough.' Great and Little Wigborough, parishes about seven miles from Colchester, in co. Essex. As will be seen from this dictionary, the suffix -bury or -borough frequently becomes modified into -brow; cf. Hembrow for Hembury. (2) Bapt.; v. Whybren.

Mary Munden: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 98.
1802. —George Wybrow and Hannah
Hockley: ibid. ii. 269.
London, 1, 3.

Wyburn.—Bapt. 'the son of Wyborn.' This surname looks wonderfully local, but, as suggested by Mr. Lower (Patr. Brit. p. 391), the probability is that it is an early personal name. There is no local prefix to it in the Hundred Roll records; cf. Osborne.

London, 2.

Wycliffe, Wickliffe.—Local, 'of Wycliffe,' the parish so called in North Yorks, 'the white cliff.' Any one who has seen it will readily see the origin of the name in the dull, whitey-grey cliff by which it stands.

Wyman, Wayman, Wymmond.—Bapt. 'the son of Wimond.' The baptismal name lasted till the Reformation:

Wimond Cary, Patent Roll, 2 Eliz.
pt. xiv.

The London Directory proves its common use in the past. With Wyman cf. Osman for Osmund, and with Wayman cf. Waymark (v. Wymark).

With the variant Waymark, cf. Wayman for Wyman, q.v.

London, 2, 1.

Wymer, Wimer.—Bapt. 'the son of Wigmar' (Yonge, ii. 410). In England popularly Wymer or Wimer. Once decidedly a favourite, and incorporated with many local terms. Lord Winmarleigh takes his title from Winmarleigh in co. Lanc., formerly Winnerlie or Wimerlegh; cf. Wymersley in the same county (v. Baines' Lanc. ii. 535).

Yarnold, Yarnall.—Bapt.

'the son of Arnold.' The corruption was an early one. With Yarnall, cf. Arnall for Arnold.

Richard fil. Yarnord, co. Salop, 1273. A. 1783. Married—John Brill and Sarah Yarnould: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 351.
London, 2, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 44.

Yarnton, Yarranton, Yarrington.—Local, 'of Yarrington' or Yarnton, a parish in co. Oxford. The London Directory form is manifestly a corruption of Yarrington as found below:

1626. John Ward and Eliz. Yarrington: Marriage Lic. (London), ii. 168.
— Arthur Croome and Dorothy Yarrington: ibid. p. 178.

London, 0, 1, 0; MDB. (co. Worc.), 0, 2, 0; Oxford, 1, 0, 0; Philadelphia, 0, 0, 1; Boston (U.S.), 0, 0, 7.

Yarrow.—Local, 'of Yarrow,' a parish in co. Selkirk.

1573. Buried—Sare Yarrowe, d. of Marques Yarrow, a stranger: St. Dionis Backchurch, p. 193.

1766. Married—John Yarrow and Susanna Merredith: St. Geo. Han. Sq. i. 151.

London, 10; Philadelphia, 7.

Yate, Yates.—Local, 'at the gate.' M.E. gate, yate. Monosyllabic local surnames frequently take a final s, perhaps the patronymic, as in Williams, Jennings, &c.; cf. Stubbs, Styles, Stones, Bridges, Brooks. Hence Yates for Yate. 'Gate (oryate), porta, foris': Prompt. Parv. Other forms of this surname are Yeatts, Yeates, and Yeats, q.v. Evidently the two following names were closely related:

1606. Laurence Yate, of Nether Darwen: Wills at Chester, i. 221.

1608. Laurence Yates, of Blackburn: ibid.

No doubt the family were known indifferently as Yate or Yates.

Yellowley, Yellowly, Yellowlee.—Local, 'of Yellowley.' I cannot find the spot. It seems to be a North-English surname. Its meaning is simple, viz. 'the golden meadow,' whether from its yellow flowers or yellow clayey soil, I cannot say.

Northumberland Court Dir., 3, 1, 0; Crockford, 0, 1, 0; New York, 0, 0, 1.

Yelverton.—Local, 'of Yelverton,' a parish in co. Norfolk, about six miles from Norwich.

1805. Married—Thomas Shields and Frances Yeaman: St. Geo. Han. Sq. ii. 319.

London, 2, 0; New York, 0, 2.

Yeo, Yea, Yoe, Yohe.—Local, 'at the yew,' from residence thereby, a West-country name; cf. Box, Ash, Birch, Plumtree, &c. Lower says, 'An ancient Devonshire family. The Yeo is a small river of that county, a tributary of the Cready, into which it falls near the town of Crediton. C. S. Gilbert derives the name from Tre-yeo, in the parish of Lancelles, near Stratton, co. Cornwall.—Hist. Cornwall. ii. 335.' In some cases this is probably true.

Yerburgh.—Local; v. Yarrowburgh.

Yetts.—Local; v. Yate.

London, 3.

Yew, Yews; v. Ewes.

Yewdall, Yeudall, Youdale.—Local, 'of Yewdale.' Probably the Yorkshire Yewdalls are sprung from some small dale of that name in the West or North Riding. There is a Yewdale at the northern end of Coniston Lake, which seems to have originated a surname. As the first instance below is found in the immediate neighbourhood of Skipton, it may be that the Coniston vale is the true parent of all the Yewdalls.

Yool, Youle, Youll, Youell.

—Bapt. 'the son of Yule,' a name given to children born on Christmas Day; cf. Noel, Nowell, Christmas, Midwinter, Pentecost, Pace, Pascal, &c. From Yorkshire the surname seems to have gone northwards, as Youll is fairly familiar to the present directories of Durham and Northumberland.

London, 4; Boston (U.S.), 1.

Youngling, Yungling. — Nick. 'the youngling,' a young man (v. Wyclif, Mark xvi. 5).
I cannot find any instances in modern English directories. It seems to be one of many names which have died out in the old country and survived in the United States.

Youngmay. — Nickname, 'the young may,' i. e. the growing boy;
v. May (1).

Martin le Yungemey, co. Sussex, 1273. A.

Youngsmith. — Nick. 'the young smith,' as distinguished from the old. The surname ought to be extant, judging by the number of early entries, but I have not discovered it. It is found in the sixteenth century.

Zachariah (v. Yonge, i. 124).

1586. Bapt. — Isabell, d. Thomas Zachary:
St. Jas. Clerkenwell, i. 18.
London, 1; Crockford, 1.

Zeal, Zeall. — Local. Mr.
Lower says, 'of Zeal, a parish in Devonshire, usually called Zeal-
Monachorum.' There is also South Zeal in the same county, and Zeals is a tithing in co. Wilts. I find no early instance of this surname, and think it is more probably a variant of Seal, q.v.; and cf. Zouch and Such.

London, 0, 1.

Zealeyn. —? Nick. I find no traces of this name in early records, so conclude that it is a corruption of Seeley, q.v.

1749. Married — Simon Zealey and

ADDENDA ET CORRIGENDA

Abbey, Abbee, Abbe.—v. p. 37. The two local instances from Freemen of York were added after the publication of that work in 1897. The article remains as originally written, when the Author had only found the local instance in the Lay Subsidy (Rylands).

Bannerman.—Offic. 'the bannerman,' the ensignbearer. Though this name, being Scotch, has no place of right in this dictionary, it is interesting as being the equivalent of Penniger, q.v.; also v. Mr. Lower's article in Patr. Brit. p. 17.

Manchester, 1; Philadelphia, 1.

Bramble.—Local, 'of Bramble.' I cannot find the place. It is probably some small spot in co. Kent.

Thomas de Bremble, co. Kent, 1273. A. Helena Bramble, co. Kent, 13 Edw. IV. pt. ii. 1606-7. Richard Bramble (Dorset): Reg. Univ. Oxf. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 293. 1623. John Bramble, 'Maioir of Poole,' co. Dorset: Visitation of Dorsetshire, p. 1. London, 3; Penzance, 1; Philadelphia, 10.

Brearley, Brierley, Brierly.—Local, 'of Brierley,' a township in the parish of Felkirk, West Riding, co. York; v. Brear.

Butts.—Local, 'at the butts,' from residence thereby. Mr. Lower says, 'Butts, the marks for archery. In old times all corporate towns, and most parishes, had a provision for this sport, and numerous fields and closes where the long bow was exercised are still called 'The Butts' (Patr. Brit. p. 48). v. Sowerbutts.

Glanfield, Glanvill, Glanville.—Local, 'de Glanville.' Mr. Lower says, 'A place in the arrondissement of Pont l'Évêque in Normandy.' The change to Glanfield was natural; cf. Merrifield for Merivale. Mr. Lower, quoting Shirley's Noble and Gentle Men, says, 'Ranulf de Glanville entered England with the Conqueror' (Patr. Brit. p. 130).

Lyndhurst.—Local, 'of Lyndhurst,' a parish in the New Forest, co. Hants.

Henry de Lindherste, co. Hants, 1273. A.

Maydwell.—Local, 'of Maidwell,' a parish in co. Northampton. v. Maidwell.

Simon de Maydewell, co. Northampt., 1273. A.
Henry de Maydewelle, co. Oxf., ibid. London, 2.

Ovenell, Overnell.—Local, 'of Ovenell.' I cannot find the spot, but the following entry seems to refer to this name :

Hugh de Ovonill, co. Salop, 20 Edw. I. R.
London, 0, 1; Oxford, 3, 0.

Penington, Pennington.—Local, 'of Pennington,' (1) a parish in the union of Ulverston, in the North Division of co. Lanc.; (2) a township in the parish of Leigh, in the South Division of the same county; (3) a hamlet in co. Hants. v. Pinnington. The name seems to have arisen in the northern county.
